Khomeini Blames Leftist Group for Tehran Explosion

From Agency Dispender
TEHRAN — Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini accused a leftist guerrilla party group Tuesday of setting off the explosion that killed
74 persons, mostly leading politiclaus whose mass funeral here was attended by hundreds of thousands of chanting mourners.

Iran's official news agency said that two persons died Tuesday from anjuries received in the blast Sunday night, bringing the death toil to 74. The attack killed four Cabinet ministers and 27 members of the Majlis. Among the slain was of the Majlis. Among the slain was Aystoliah Mohammed Beheshti, the chief justice of the Supreme Court, leader of the Islamic Republican Party and the most powerful man in Iran after Aystoliah Khomeini

Also Tuesday, the agency said that Mohammed Kachoui, gover-nor of Tehran's Evin Prison, had been murdered by "United States agents." A prison official said Mr. Kachoni was shot six times Monday afternoon by a guard who had been dismissed for having "bad morals." Pars said the guard and six persons had been arrested.

Syrian Missile Crisis Eased As Militiamen Leave Zahle

By Stuart Auerbach

Washington Post Service KSARA, Lebanon - The Syrian missile crisis that has threatened the Mideast with another Arab-Israeli conflict since early May was eased Tuesday by the carefully staged withdrawal of about 100 lsraeli-backed Christian militiamen from Zahle, which has been under Syrian siege for three months.

The surrender of the Maronite Christian Phalange militia, diplomats said, sets the stage for the withdrawal of the six Syrian surface-to-air missile batteries that sparked its current confrontation with Israel.

The end of the long siege, during which Zahle's nearly 100,000 residents took to basement bomb shelters to escape the Syrian heavy artillery barrages, was arranged through mediation by the Saudi Arabian and Kuwaiti ambassadors

U.S. Blamed Arms Talks

By Kevin Klose

Washington Post Service
MOSCOW — Soviet leader
Leonid I. Brezhnev on Tuesday blamed the United States again for delaying talks on limiting nuclear arms in Europe and told former West German Chancellor Willy Brandt that Washington wants "a fresh edition of the Cold War."

Mr. Brandt is chairman of West Germany's Social Democratic Party, which is increasingly split over a NATO decision to deploy new U.S. missiles in Western Europe. Mr. Brandt backed a summit between Mr. Brezhnev and President Reagan, declaring that "the world should not be made to wait for it too long,"

He and Mr. Brezhnev talked for three hours Tuesday at the Kremlin in what Tass described as "candid" discussions, meaning there has been little agreement on any

Offer Reiterated

Mr. Brezhnev, in a speech last February to the Soviet party congress, proposed an early summit with Mr. Reagan. The administration has expressed little interest in the idea, but has pledged that it will be ready to begin arms limitation talks by the end of the year.

Mr. Brezhnev reiterated that the Kremlin is "ready to sit down on that issue even tomorrow, if you like," and said the Soviet Union "is ready to suspend deployment of its medium-range missiles in the European part of the country on the day talks open" on substantive reduction. However, he said, this would only happen "if the U.S.A. tells us that during the talks it will not build up its medium-range nu-clear means in Europe either."

The NATO decision is aimed to overcome what the West says is Soviet nuclear superiority in the European region from deploying about 200 SS-20 missiles in the Warsaw Pact countries and in Western Russia, But Mr. Brezhnev again asserted that "rough military parity" exists between the Warsaw Pact and NATO.

"The striving of the U.S. for military supremacy over the Soviet Union undermines international stability and makes shaky [the United States] own security.

TEL AVIV — Shimon Peres' opposition Labor Party narrowly edged out Prime Minister Mena chem Begin's Likud bloc Tuesday by one or two seats in Israel's parnentary election, an Israeli television projection said.

The margin was too small to ensure that Labor would be able to form the next government,
Just as the last of nearly 5,000 polling stations closed, the state-run TV announced projected re-sults based on an after-balloting canvas of about 20,000 voters, It showed Labor getting 48 or 49 seats in the 120-member Knesset to 47 seats for Likud.

The perennial coalition partner in every government since 1952, the National Religious Party, polled six seats and the rightist Tehiya faction won two, the TV projections said.

Former Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan's Telem Party received only one seat, the projection showed. "This is much less than we expected," Mr. Dayan conceded, ac-knowledging, "to an extent, it was our own failure."

Too Early to Tell

Because of the narrow margin of Labor's projected victory, it was too early to tell whether Mr. Peres or Mr. Begin would be asked by President Yitzhak Navon to form the next government.

Housing Minister David Levy, a high-ranking Likud candidate, said. "According to the television projection, Shimon Peres cannot under any circumstances form

But at Labor headquarters, there was early rejoicing.
"It is clear from this projection that the Labor movement has recovered significantly since 1977. said Haim Bar-Lev, who would likely become Mr. Peres' deputy non's problems Saturday in the prime minister. "David Levy is no prophet." Hanoch Smith, a U.S.-born statistician, who compiled the statistical TV forecast, said neither Likud nor Labor had much of a margin over the other among Jewish voters. Labor's projected edge stemmed largely from the 250,000 Israeli Arab voters, he said. "In the Arab sector, Labor enjoyed a much greater advantage than ever before," Mr. Smith said. In the May, 1977, balloting, Likud won 43 seats and Labor won 32. Sixty-one seats are needed for a majority in parliament.

Interior Minister Josef Burg's

Mr. Burg said the bloc of religious parties, including two other small factions, would refrain from forming a coalition with La-"From the architectural point of view," he said, "the easiest thing is that a religious bloc plus the Likud is immediately in the neighborhood of 60 seats. But Labor, without the religious parties, has to put together a coalition of one- or twoseat parties which is a mathematically complicated task." Two hours before the polls

In the document, the Central Committee also endorsed the blueprint for China's future drawn by Deng Xiaoping, the party vice chairman. It said that Mr. Deng FitzGerald Is Victor

As Ireland's Premier

DUBLIN - Garret FitzGerald was elected premier of Ireland on Tuesday to head a minority coalition, narrowly defeating incumbent Charles Haughey.

The parliamentary vote, with the independent members tipping the balance, ended a battle for control of the Dail, or lower house. An inconclusive national election June 11 left none of the major parties with a majority in the 166-seat

Refusal of three of the independents to join the coalition triggered speculation that Mr. FitzGerald might call a new gener-al election within a few months in a bid to get a solid mandate.

The vote on Mr. FitzGerald, leader of the Fine Gael Party, was 81-79 with three abstentions. All 15 members of the coalition partner, the Labor Party, voted for Mr. FitzGerald, and one independent stood with him. The vote on Mr. Haughey, whose Fianna Fail has been the ruling party for 30 of the past 40 years, was 79 for, 83 against and one abstention.

Thin Voting Edge

Mr. FitzGerald, 55, will rule with 65 Fine Gael legislators, the 15 Laborites and single independent Socialist, Fianna Fail has 78 seats and it, too, got one independent vote. The balance of power is held by four independents, including the one who voted for Mr. Haughey. The other three voted against him, but abstained in the vote on Mr. FitzGerald.

Although the Dail has 166 seats, the effective membership was cut to 164 because two convicted Irish Republican Army guerrillas, elected on June 11, are imprisoned in Northern Ireland. The battle in the neighboring north between British forces and the mostly Roman Catholic IRA seemed not as big a campaign issue as the republic's troubled economy.

One of the six independents, former Labor deputy John O'Connell, was elected speaker and did not vote in Tuesday's Dail election. Shaky Alliance

This is the fourth time Fine Gael and Labor have governed in part-nership since 1932, but the alliance is shaky. Most of Labor's leaders support the coalition, while many of the party's rank-and-file union members do not because of opposition to Fine Gael's plans to hike sales taxes and its anti-inflation curbs on government borrowing.

Mr. FitzGerald took over leadership of Fine Gael after Liam Cosgrave abruptly resigned when the last coalition was thrashed by Fianna Fail in the June, 1977, election. An economist, Mr. FitzGerald served as foreign minister in that administration.

His main task now will be to revive the battered economy, Inflation is currently at an annual rate of 17.1 percent, unemployment stands at 126,000, or 11 percent of the national work force, and the national debt is a record $5.25 billion. He also faces a major problem over Northern Ireland, where the political and sectarian violence has raged for nearly 12 years.

He is expected to demand more flexible British approach to the hunger strike. Four hunger strikers died last month, triggering widespread violence, and eight men continue to fast.

Party Censures Mao, Publicly Backs Deng

By Michael Weisskopf Washington Past Service

PEKING — The Chinese Com-munist Party issued a painful and soul-searching document Tuesday, concluding that its late chairman, Mao Tse-tung, committed serious errors during his last 20 years as political leader, but maintaining that his lifetime contributions outweighed his mistakes.

The report, drafted by the Central Committee after months of divisive debate, also criticized the party for failing to check Mao's ower, condemned Mao's Cultural Revolution, rebuked his handpicked successor and placed the party's imprimatur on the new reform measures guiding China

But the most significant sections of the 119-page document dealt with Mao's legacy, the first time China's fractious leadership has rendered an "official" judgment on the man who founded the Communist Party 60 years ago, led it to victory in 1949 and then ruled the nation until his death in 1976.

thousands of party officials and threw the nation in chaos before it ended in 1976 "was responsible for the most severe setback and heaviest losses suffered by the party, the state and the people since the founding of the People's Republic," the document said.

"It was initiated and led by comrade Mao Tse-tung," the report asserted, adding that the late chairman must be held chiefly responsible for the ensuing tragedy.

Although Mao has been chided by the official press and some re-form politicians for his role in the Cultural Revolution, never before has a ruling body with the status of the 195-member party Central Committee united behind a criticism of the man known at the time as "the great helmsman."

Forming a consensus on the is-sue has been extremely difficult to achieve because of the large number of officials still in the military and bureaucracy who prospered during the cultural revolution and fear that a condemnation of Mao's role, in effect, jeopardizes their current positions.

Although even the most loyal Maoists were willing to concede in general terms that the Cultural Revolution had been a disaster, they resisted inner-party moves to criticize specific incidents that could have exposed their own roles during the period, according to diplomatic sources with good Chinese contacts.

Countering this so-called leftist bloc were those who suffered grievously during the Cultural Revolution — intellectuals, scientists and veteran cadres, including some associated with the pragmatists now running China — who sought a detailed censuring of Mao for stunting the nation's political and economic life.

The document issued Tuesday represented a compromise, reproaching Mao for his "entirely erroneous appraisal" of China's political situation at the time, for his "personal arbitrariness" that shut out debate in the party and for giving power to his wife. Jiang Qing, and her radical Gang of Four associates.

French Socialists Assailed Over TV Moves

By Jonathan Kandell national Herald Tribune

PARIS - For more than two decades, French Socialists bitterly complained about the manipulation of radio and television news by conservative governments.

But little more than a month in power. President François Mitterrand and his Socialists are fast losing credibility on their promises to avoid an ideological purge while imposing nonnarrican standards in the state-controlled broadcasting industry.

The controversy began to rumble on May 10, the night Mr. Mit-terrand was elected. A huge victory crowd at the Bastille - that symbol of the fall of the old regime - unmercifully heckled representatives of the state television, and specifically called for the firing of Jean-Pierre Elkabbach, news director of the second channel and the TV commentator most despised by the left because of his allegedly pronounced sympathies for the previous center-right government. A few weeks later, the new communications minister, Georges Fillioud, citing with approval the popular outburst at the Bastille, urged radio and television directors to hand in their resignations. Several Resignations

But the minister's sharp comments did lead a number of executives to resign, including the presidents of two of three television channels and the news director of a radio station. Mr. Elkabbach was forced out this week in an incident which he refused to call a resignation and which his employers declined to call a firing.

Perhaps more important in the weeks and months ahead, Mr. Fillioud's remarks were interpreted as a green light for broadcast journalists to form ad hoc committees aimed at influencing the direction and news content of radio and

At Europe 1, the leading radio station, an assembly of journalists elected a committee to "participate in the creation of news policies and to define the lines, style, tone and content" of news programs.

"There is nothing wrong with Thomas' politics or his profession-al competence," explained an un-ion member. "We just do not feel that the government should act without consultation. Or else, it is no different than unffer the previous government."

From its beginnings, French television was viewed as a powerful instrument of the state. It never developed the independence of the British Broadcasting Corp. The left — hoping to reach government someday — did not attack the premise of state control over television and radio and supported arguments that electronic media were too important to be turned over to private interests.

Under President Giscard d'Estaing, an effort was made to eliminate the more heavy-handed, progovernment news manipulation that occurred under Presidents De Gaulle and Georges Pompidou. Political opponents began to receive more air time. There were fewer incidents of blatant directives to news editors from the Elysée Palace.

Royal Deference

unquestioned

"I rarely saw a news spot canceled because it might displease the Elysee," said a television journalist recalling the last four years at his channel. "It never had to go that far. You simply assumed that some topics were taboo."

Mr. Giscard d'Estaing was treated with royal deference. Probing stories on prickly issues such as unemployment were largely avoided in favor of optimistic, forwardlooking specials on the fledgling space technology and advanced electronics industries. The Socialists always seemed to be men-tioned in the context of their disputes with the Communists.

The tone of radio and television has changed abruptly since Mr. Mitterrand's election. The activities of the Cabinet tend to dominate news programs. Conservatives are now accorded the same opposition status that the left labored under for so long. Belatedly, a few television reports are documenting the failures of the previous government's economic strategy.

President Mitterrand still complains that some of his major statements have not been given the prime time coverage they deserve.

But broadcasting journalists as-sert that the problem is that the new president has occasionally failed to alert the media in time to make the evening news programs, while Mr. Giscard d'Estaing was a master at stage-managing his important declarations for maximum impact on television and radio virtually spoon-feeding journalists with written versions of his speeches, including summaries and highlighted passages, well before deadlines

Strategies for Survival

With the installation of the Socialist government, the stars of radio and television journalism have mapped out several strategies for survival. Some have taken a low profile, appearing less frequently on the screen or at the microphone, in the hopes of riding out the political turmoil. A few maintain that they labored bonorably under the constraints of the previous government and are willing to prove their mettle under the Socialists. Others assert that they never let their personal political convictions interfere with their coverage, and view with distaste the loud boasting of some colleagues who now claim Socialist sympathies.

The upheaval at the television and radio stations - often combining political backlash and a settling of personal scores — has made the situation difficult even for some topflight journalists with solid professional reputations. The news director of TF 1, Jean-Marie Cavada, who quit the same post at another television channel in 1977 after refusing to buckle under political pressure from the Elysee, will probably keep his job. But he has had to weather some blistering attacks from leftist union representatives that seem largely motivated by his decision to brusquely shake up his staff in an attempt to improve the quality of coverage in recent months.

Eventually, the Socialist government hopes to deal with the broadcasting industry in a more orderly and legalistic fashion. Under the legislation now being prepared, the president would no longer have the right to handpick the network directors, who would be chosen in-stead by administrative boards, including representatives of the government or legislature, broadcasting station personnel, and consumer groups. Regional televi-sion and radio stations — none of them privately owned - may be licensed under the condition that they offer a variety of political views. Different political groups may be allowed their own weekly television news broadcasts to encourage "political pluralism." And news directors may be picked from a list offered by station editorial

But for the moment, the government appears to be reaping more criticism than praise — in both conservative and leftist journals for its handling of its radio and television empire.

He further said the delegation was told that Moscow considers the Polish crisis an internal matter for the Poles to settle themselves.

Remaining Tanzanian Troops Leave Uganda

DAR ES SALAAM, Tanzania — Tanzanian troops who helped over-throw dictator Idi Amin completed their withdrawal from Uganda on Tuesday after an involvement which cost $600 million.

The troops entered Uganda in January, 1979, and fought their way to Kampala, where they oversaw the installation of a new government in April. About 45,000 Tanzanian troops were in Uganda at the height of the war. There were still 10,000 troops in the country when President Julius Nyetere ordered them home eight weeks ago.

The war cost Tanzania $500 million, according to Tanzanian officials. Maintaining peacekeeping troops in Uganda cost a further $100 million, none of which was repaid by Uganda despate an agreement to do so, they

Andrew Boraine, 22, is the second white university student to be banned in less than two weeks as part of increased measures against dissidents and trade unionists by the authorities. No reasons are given for banning orders. Mr. Boraine helped organize protest rallies against the government's apartheid policies last month and it is believed that his recent detention and banning are in connection with those activities.

The banning ruling prohibits Mr. Boraine from traveling outside the. magisterial district in which he lives in Cape Town for the next five years. He is also prohibited from being quoted in any publication; from being in the presence of more than one person at a time, and from entering any factory or black neighborhood.

Japanese Resisting U.S. Insistence on Larger Defense Role

By Richard Halloran New York Times Service
WASHINGTON — Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger has insisted that Japan rapidly increase its inilitary strength to help cope with a Pacific threat from the Soviet Union, but Japan's visiting Defense Minister Joji Omura has just as firmly resisted. United States and Japanese offi-cials said Monday after the de-fense ministers met in the Pentagon that Washington and Tokyo remain far apart on the question of how much military power Japan should contribute to the common

Welfare Cuts In U.S. Fall On Children

By Bernard Weinraub

New York Times Service WASHINGTON,— The budget cuts approved by the U.S. House would mean a $1.1-billion reduction in welfare benefits that will largely affect children and working mothers, according to congressional analysts and welfare specialists.

Nearly 660,000 households about 17 percent of the recipients in the Aid to Families with Dependent Children program — will lose some or all of their federalstate aid under the Reagan administration's proposals.

"These are the families of the nation's poorest women who are compelled to turn to the AFDC program to obtain basic minimum levels of food, clothing and shelter to their children," said the Center on Social Welfare Policy and Law, a government-supported program of the Legal Services Corp.
"Eighty percent of the 3.7 million families who are currently receiving AFDC are families headed by

The key to the Reagan budget cuts, which the House approved last Friday, is a measure that would drastically alter the eligibility formula that has been in effect since the 1960s. Currently, state welfare agencies "disregard" portions of a working parent's gross income when calculating pay-ments. Beyond this, a working parent makes deductions for child care and work-related expenses.

4-Month Limitation . .

The Reagan proposal would limit the wage "disregards" to the first four months of payments, after which a family would face substantial cuts in income. Currently, the first $30 of monthly earnings, plus one-third of remaining earnings, are "disregarded" in computing welfare payments, which varies from state to state.

"These provisions discriminate against those who are struggling to remain in the paid labor market and make work less profitable than welfare," said a report that circulated Monday among Democratic staff members of the Ways and Means Committee. "Many families simply could not hold on to their jobs in the face of these

Sihanouk Says Cambodia Talks Likely to Fail

The Amociated Press PARIS — Prince Norodom Sihanouk said in an interview published Tuesday that the international conference on Cambodia, scheduled for next month in New York, has no chance of succeeding because the major parties would be

Prince Sihanouk, in an interview in Cannes with the French news agency Agence France-Presse, said the UN-sponsored conference was bound to fail because Vietnam, the Soviet Union and the Phnom Penh government were not participating. He also said he may offer his own plan for Cambodia.

"They will solve the problem on paper," Prince Sihanouk said. "But you must be realistic. To condemn Vietnam serves nothing because that will only stiffen the position of our adversaries." The former Cambodian leader said the path to a solution must begin with a "se-cret diplomacy" with the "other

"To solve a problem in a country troubled with foreign interference, you must negotiate a com-promise," he said, adding that such a compromise should be based on the complete neutraliza-tion of Cambodia with interna-tional guarantees, the disarma-ment of the Cambodians and free elections.

Presuming that Vietnam would accept such a compromise, Prince Sihanouk said there must be a period of transition involving a UN peacekeeping force and an interna-tional control commission to handle diplomatic and administrative affairs. It would oversee the disarmament and, later, the elections.

The issue appeared potentially more aggravating and resistant to compromise than the trade issues. At stake was the question of whether the U.S.-Japan defense alhance was to have substance or to be a parmership in name only. The dispute also appeared to have wider implications for President Reagan, who has set a high priority on getting European allies to enlarge their military capability. He may be unable to persuade the British, West Germans and others to build up their military forces if the United States is unable to get the Japanese to do so.

Mr. Weinberger, the officials said, told Mr. Omura that Japan's defense plan drawn up in 1976 was not sufficient to accomplish the goal of strengthening Japanese military forces by the end of the 1980s. Japanese officials said that Mr. Omura, while concurring with Mr. Weinberger's assessment of a Soviet threat, contended that Japan was constrained by its consti-tution and by the need to balance defense spending with social wel-

Difference in Spending

Both U.S. and Japanese officials said that the two ministers did not discuss specific levels of military spending or armaments, although Mr. Weinberger pointed out that the Reagan administration asked Congress for $222 billion in military spending next year compared with Japan's $11 billion.

Other U.S. officials said that Mr. Weinberger referred Mr. Omura to specific numbers of ships, aircraft and munitions that American officials presented to Japanese officials at a working level meeting in Hawaii earlier this

The Americans have been reluctant to discuss those specifics, but the Japanese have said they were stunned by suggestions that they procure 70 destroyers instead of II, Technical Proposal" and "Dual the 60 called for in the current plan, 25 submarines rather than 16 and 520 combat aircraft instead of

The Reagan administration, according to U.S. officials, wants clear assurance from the Japanese that they intend to build up enough military power to defend their own territory, the seas and skies around Japan and the sea lanes for 1,000 miles toward the Philippines and Guam. U.S. Military to Retire .45 Pistol After 70 Years as Main Sidearm

The Associated Press WASHINGTON - The .45caliber pistol is retiring after 70 years of service as the U.S. military's principal sidearm. Acting for all services, the Army on Monday invited contractors to submit proposals for a 9mm handgun to replace the .45 automatic and the .38-caliber pistol, which is used to a lesser extent than the .45.

This will mark the first major change in U.S. military handguns in more than half a century, according to the Pentagon. The new weapon will use ammunition that is standard in Initial proposals call for production of 220,000 new weapons. Eventually the Pentagon plans to replace all its 418,000 .45-caliber automatics and 136,000 .38-caliber pistols.

The first deliveries of the new weapons are expected in mid-1982 for the U.S. Coast Guard. The entire change will take place over a decade.

Poles Promised $100,000, Arrested U.S. Expert Says

By Jay Mathews Washington Past Service
LOS ANGELES — A former

Hughes Aircraft Co. engineer charged with espionage has told the FBI that he photographed secret documents with a special camera provided by Polish agents and was promised nearly $100,000 a year in gold and cash for his work. William Holden Bell, 61, confessed when confronted by the FBI last week and allowed agents to record a conversation with his Polish contact Sunday, according to an FBI affidavit released Monday. FBI agents have been investigating a concerted effort by Soviet bloc agents to buy information from employees of U.S. defense contrac-

The affidavit indicates Mr. Bell photographed a number of secret documents but none in the top-secret category while working at Hughes' radar systems group in El Segundo, Calif. An FBI spokes-man said he assumes the Polish agent who received the information eventually turned it over to the Soviet Union.

Mr. Bell's bail was set at $50,000 after his attorney argued that he had been cooperating with the investigation and had a wife and children in the area. U.S. Magistrate James J. Penne restricted him to Los Angeles and neighboring Orange County and told him to stay away from airports. Also arraigned but denied bail was Mari-W. Zacharski, the contact who was living in the United States as an employee of a Polish company. Both were arrested Sunday.

Financial Difficulty

Mr. Bell told investigators he met Mr. Zacharski in late 1977 or early 1978 at a fashionable apartment complex called Playa del Rey where both lived with their families. Mr. Bell said at that time he was having financial difficulties and Mr. Zacharski told him he might be able to assist him.

Mr. Bell told investigators he has made three trips to Austria and one trip Switzerland since November, 1979, to meet other Polish agents.

In his first trip to Austria, Mr. Bell said, three people approached him and said "Aren't you a friend Marian?" which Mr. Zacharski had told him would be the signal. 2 AID Officials Explain Why They Quit Over U.S. Opposition to Baby Food Code

WASHINGTON — When Stephen C. Joseph and Eugene N.

U.S. government jobs last month, they did something that was rare among Washington bureaucrats: they left over a matter of principle. "Had I not resigned." Mr. Babb said the other day, "I'd be packing to go overseas right now." But in a public dispute with the White two mission director's jobs, and we were talking about a third." Instead of packing, Mr. Babb was sitting in his home in Great Falls, Va., where he now spends much of his time. Across the Potomac River, Dr. Joseph spends his days at his apartment in Washing-Dr. Joseph said he was concerned about how he would make his alimony and child-support pay-ments. Mr. Babb has a mortgage note coming due. Both of them, however, said they would do it "If you can't speak out for what you feel is important and right in our society," Dr. Joseph said, "then what's the point of it all?" High-level officials, of course, have been known to quit over policy differences, frequently with much publicity. They usually go on to high-paying jobs outside government, as do many middle-level bureaucrats who have planned well. But Dr. Joseph and Mr. Babb both suddenly resigned high-pay-ing jobs in the government, where they had the likelihood of lifetime tenure, without having first lined up something else.

Both Dr. Joseph, a pediatrician who was the highest-ranking health professional at the agency, and Mr. Babb, who was deputy asnutrition, have worked for the United States in underdeveloped countries.

In village stores all over the world, they say, they have seen the posters put out by infant formula manufacturers urging mothers to bottle-feed their babies.

Last month, the United States cast the only vote against the code at the World Health Assembly in Geneva. The Reagan administration said it did so to preserve the free-enterprise system and to preent the health organization from becoming an "international Federal Trade Commission." It also said that the resolution was an unwarranted intrusion by a UN agency into commercial activity.

Mr. Babb and Dr. Joseph then resigned. "It wasn't a difficult decision for me," said Mr. Babb, 44, a tanned, powerfully built man who has worked in Afghanistan, Lebanon, Jordan and Laos. "Most serious professionals in the Foreign Service or in international development are in it with a strong commitment. It's not an easy life. You give up a lot.

"I lost a son overseas," Mr. Babb said, pointing to a portrait on the wall of a curly-haired boy of about 6. Mr. Babb said that the boy was killed in a horseback-riding accident when he was stationed in Jordan several years ago.

"If we had been in a country with more sophisticated hospitals. maybe he could have been saved,"
Mr. Babb continued. "That did something to our outlook on life. Job security is not a thing of great importance to me. I love this business. I would have loved to go out as a mission director to the country I was assigned to. But it's not important as the principle involved. It seemed to me that to go along with that policy would be to go against everything I believed in. It would have made a mockery of my whole professional career.

Dr. Joseph, 44, interviewed separately, gave a similar account. "In any bureaucracy you have to compromise. But there comes a point when you can't participate in something you know is wrong, and wrong in a major way. I'm a pediatrician, and the first rule of medicine is: Do no harm.'

Red Brigades Said to Offer Prisoner Trade

The Associated Press GENOA - Police on Tuesday GENOA — Police on Tuesday were investigating an alleged offer of the Red Brigades to exchange four persons kidnapped by the terrorist gang for a captured member of their group who has collaborated with the police.

A caller to the local newspaper Secolo XIX said Monday, "This is the Red Brigades. We propose an exchange between our four prisoners Cirillo, Taliercio, Sandrucci and Peci for Patrizio Peci."

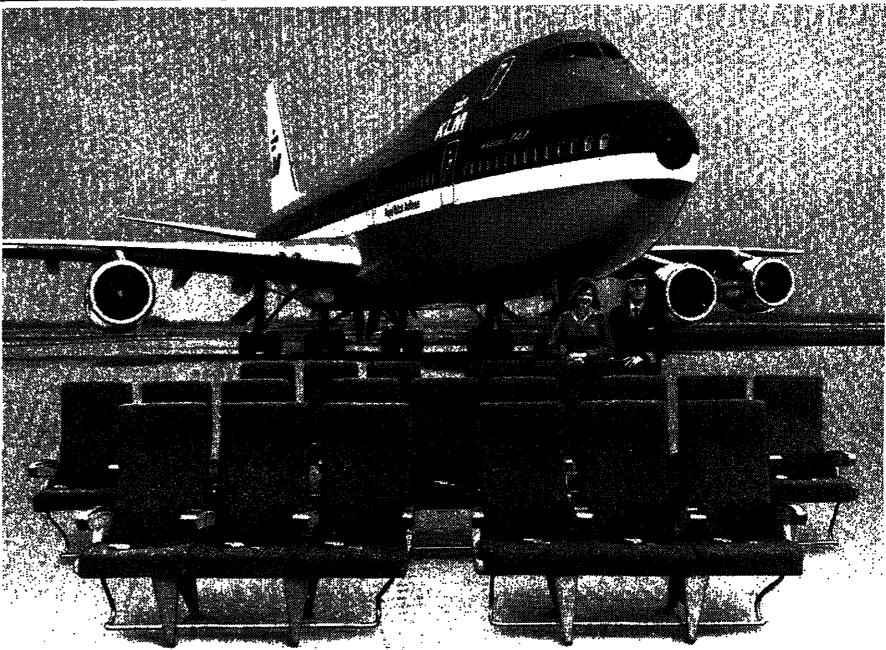

Police said such calls by the Red Brigades were usually followed by written communiques, but that there has been no sign of such a

Spain Cracking Down on Extreme Right

By Francois Raitberger

MADRID - Spanish police are cracking down on extreme rightists, who were emboldened by last February's attempted coup and are apparently increasingly active behind the scenes against the fiveyear-old democracy.

Four army officers and 10 civilians suspected of having planned violent actions, possibly to coincide with the saint's day of King Juan Carlos last week, were detained. Eight were later released.

The arrests were the clearest indication so far of possible links between rightist soldiers and civilians and of the government's determination to defend itself against what the press calls tramas negras (dark plots).

Only one civilian was among 32 persons indicted of military rebellion in the abortive coup despite widespread suspicion that the conspiracy had roots among civilians nostalgic for Franco's dictatorship.

U.S. Genetics Scientists Develop 'Sunbean' Plant

By Bryce Nelson Los Angeles Times Service

WASHINGTON - Government and university scientists have developed a genetic technology that eventually could lead to new types of plants and sources of protein, Agriculture Secretary John R. Block says.

The researchers have transferred a protein gene from a bean seed to the cell of a sunflower, a member of another plant family. Mr. Block called the step, which could lead to the development of a new kind of sunflower, a breakthrough that opens a whole new era in plant

"It is the first step toward the day when scientists will be able to increase the nutritive value of plants, to make plants resistant to disease and environmental stresses and to make them capa-ble of fixing nitrogen in the air," Mr. Block said Monday.

He added that the research had opened the way toward creating variations not now available because of sterility barriers between plant species.

Savings for Farmers

Mr. Block cited as one possibility the development of food plants that could take nitrogen directly from the atmosphere. He said this could mean great savings for farmers in the cost of nitrogen fertilizers.

News of the plant experiments came less than two weeks after Mr. Block announced in Sacramento, Calif., that a gene-splicing technique had been used to develop a new vaccine for footand-mouth disease, one of the most serious livestock infections. The scientists who developed the new technique in plants are biochemist John D. Kemp of the Agriculture Department's Agricultural Research Service and Prof. Timothy C. Hall of the University of Wisconsin.

Mr. Hall said the kind of gene-splicing techniques used in the experiments may have commercial applications by the late

Bacterium Used

Mr. Kemp and Mr. Hall successfully transferred the gene, the tiny unit of life that governs the transmittal of hereditary characteristics and cell structure, from the bean seed into the foreign environment of the sun-flower cell. They reported that the gene was stable in its new environment and called the new plant tissue the "sunbean."

What is crucial about their experiment, Mr. Hall said, is that it is the first time scientists have been able to detect that the transplanted gene was "pro-ducing messenger RNA," de-scribed by the Agriculture Department as "the cellular vehicle that carries genetic information from the genes to the proteinsynthesizing machinery of the

Pope's Illness Is a Common but Baffling Viral Infection The risk of acquiring CMV from the diagnosis of CMV in the pope Among adults, close contact ap-

By Lawrence K. Aleman, M.D.

New York Times Service
NEW YORK — The viral illness that the Vatican says has complicated the recovery of Pope John Paul II from an assassination attempt is one of the most common and baffling of human infections.

The pontiff's doctors presume the infection was introduced into the pope's body with one of the 10 blood transfusions he received during and immediately after emergency surgery on May 13. It is an infection for which no specific therapy exists, and recovery is up to the healing powers of nature.

The illness is called cytomegalo virus infection, or CMV, and it infects the overwhelming majority of people at one time or another. Yet a medical mystery is why the virus infects so many people but makes

The symptoms and damage pro-duced by CMV vary widely and depend on the age at which an individual is infected. CMV infections can cause abortion, stillbirth or death in the early days after birth from bleeding, anemia, hepa-titis or brain damage, among other

Subtle Damage

The virus can also damage body in more subtle ways. CMV is considered an important cause of mental retardation. It can also lead to hearing and visual loss.

Although most adults, as well as most infants, may become infected but escape symptoms, many infected individuals develop fever, fatigue, liver and spleen enlargement and hing inflammation. The pope had all these symptoms, according to one of his doctors. The doctor also said that the medical team was uncertain whether the pontiff's lung infection was caused by CMV because the type of inflammation seen on his chest X-rays differed from the usual pattern of a CMV pulmonary infection.

CMV probably has caused infections for centuries, but the disease was recognized only in recent decades. In the late 19th century, doctors began to notice peculiar cells in the urine and organs of some children. Observed through an ordinary microscope, the cells appeared enlarged and contained dense particles called inclusion

For a long time, the cell damage was attributed to a parasite. It was only in 1956 that scientists discov-ered that a virus of the herpes family, not a parasite, produced the cell changes and was responsible for the wide variety of symptoms and damage. Accordingly, the name cytomegalovirus, derived from the Greek words cyto, for cell, and megalo, for large, was assigned to it.

How It May Be Spread

Doctors have yet to fully deter-mine how the infection spreads. The virus can pass from a mother's blood through the placenta to a fetus, and it occurs frequently in the cervix and in breast milk.

By Serge Schmemann -

MOSCOW — Among the pieces of legislation approved at the Supreme Soviet session last week was a new law on the status of foreigners in the Soviet Union, hailed by its authors as superior in its "de-mocratism and humanity" to any analogous legislation in the West.

New York Times Service

Vadim V. Zagladin, first deputy chief of the Central Committee's international department, declared that "citizens of many foreign governments have more fully guaranteed rights in the Soviet Union than in their own country.' The law is largely a codification of the tangle of rules and practices ers residing in or visiting the Soviet Union. It opens with a bold proc-lamation that foreigners enjoy the same rights, liberties and status before the law as Soviet citizens. The measure then enumerates a series of rights ranging from the right to work and to housing through freedom of conscience. What follows in many of the 33 articles, however, is a broad legal justification for "agencies of inter-nal affairs" or "competent Soviet agencies" to control and restrict the movements, residence, contacts and activities of foreigners.

Work Simplified

Nikolai V. Talyzin, the commu-nications minister, reiterated this when he introduced the legislation.
The new law," he said, "will simplify the work of our government

Quoting directly from Article 3 of the law, Mr. Talyzin spelled out the critical qualification: "Particular note must be taken of the spe-cial provisions to the effect that the use by foreign citizens of their rights and liberties must not harm the interests of Soviet society and

Article 19, for example, says that foreign citizens can move about the Soviet Union and select their home in accordance with So-viet law. The article continues, however, with a qualification that becomes something of a chorus throughout the law: "Restriction of travel and of selection of residence is permitted when this is essential to safeguard government security, to defend public order, the health and morality of the pop-ulation, to defend the rights and legitimate interests of Soviet citizens and other persons."

In practice, foreigners in Mos-cow and other Soviet cities live in designated compounds, and entry to these by uninvited Soviet citi-

LONDON — Air traffic controllers at five points in Scotland and England walked off the job Tuesday and engineers began a three-day strike as part of a 17week campaign for more pay by British civil servants.

BA said it canceled 50 European and transatiantic flights, and a spokesman for Trans World Air-lines said the action added "another element of uncertainty" to its operation. The civil servants have demanded raises of 15 percent. The government has offered 7 perzens is barred by uniformed po-licemen. Travel by foreigners is eifectively restricted beyond 40 kilometers (25 miles) from the city

The common explanation offered for having policemen outside foreign compounds has been the need to protect the visitors from unsavory elements. The new law seems to support the assumption prevalent among foreigners that the officers are there more to protect Soviet citizens from inadvertent exposure to supposedly bourgeois values. The law continues with extensive grounds for refusing entry into or exit from the Soviet Union, including state security, violation of vided for in Soviet legislation."

Article 30, on "curtailing the duration of stay in the U.S.S.R.," declares that "the term of a foreign citizen's stay in the U.S.S.R. can also be shortened in the event that there is no longer any reason for staying further." The determination, according to the article, will be made by the internal affairs agencies.

ling a foreigner is left to "competent Soviet agencies," which are also empowered to set the time by which the foreigner must leave the Mr. Zagladin told the Supreme

Similarly, a decision on expel-

Soviet, "It must be especially underimed that the proposed law differs in principle from the analogous laws of bourgeois governments in its democratism and humanity and in the scope of questions it resolves."

Although the treatment of Soviet citizens and of foreigners may differ widely in practice, the premise underlying the "rights and liberties" accorded to both is to a large extent the same. "Rights" in the Soviet system are considered as specific obligations undertaken by the state, rather than as inherent rights that the state cannot deny. The privileges granted by the state remain secondary to the needs and security of the state.

In this context, as both Mr. Zagladin and Mr. Talyzin declared, foreign citizens are equal to Soviet citizens before the law.

The Latest Word on Modern Manners From Debrett's

By Hebe Dorsey

al Herold Tribu ONDON - If you've always wondered how to eat peas, how to handle the butler, whether or not to return that engagement ring, how to make small talk at parties, not to mention how to accommodate unmarried guests, look it up in Debrett's "Etiquette and Modern Manners," which claims to be "the first complete and authoritative book of its kind to appear in over half a century."

Considered the social arbiter of taste for the last 200 years, Debrett's last week issued its latest guide, compiled by seven authorities, two men and five women. In 16 chapters, the 400-page social manual answers all those agonizing questions that might come up "from cradle to grave." As it caters largely to British bluebloods, it also tells you all you need to know about royal occasions, including how to curtsy ("do a brief bob with the weight on the front foot."

guide comes in handy, it also reveals that, if she wishes, "a woman may bow instead of curtsy: it is the acknowledgment that counts, not the exact form it takes."

Ancient Subject

Books about etiquette are not new, by any means, as we are reminded in Debrett's introduction. The oldest book in existence contains the pharaoh Ptah Hotep's instructions to his son on personal conduct, a topic that has gone out of style, as "many parents feel too unsure of their pools of worldly wisdom to offer a dip."

Another topic that has lost its luster is advice on the arts of worldly success, as discussed in "The Courtier," Castiglione's manual for Renaissance youths. In the 15th century, still according to the introduction, many books appeared on "civility," which included details like "how to fold a napkin, lie in bed; and cantioned

He spoke of another benefit performance he recently organized, one to aid the families of the murdered black children in Atlanta.

But etiquette books really flourished in Victorian days when the rising middle classes were "ob-sessed with nuances of social customs which marked the social elite," which, unfortunately, "kept changing the rules." Those arriv istes, as Debrett's calls social climbers, are responsible for the plethora of etiquette books. Today, according to Harold Brooks-Baker, managing director of De-brett's, they have been replaced by middle-class wives obsessed by questions of correct social eti-quette. "It's the middle class, not the aristocracy, that cares most about 'correct' behavior," he said.

Women in Business While the average non-British reader could live without etiquette at Royal Ascot, Trooping the Col-or and Glyndebourne, "Etiquette and Modern Manners" is broader based when it comes to such topics as women in business and current attitudes toward courtship. De brett's experts blame the influx of women into business for changing the conventional rules. "A man, who, in a social con-text, would always rise when a woman enters the room, and always open the door for her to leave, is not expected to leap up and down each time his secretary walks in and out of office," it states in plain, if slightly grieved tones. As for the woman boss, "the rules are no different than those for a male boss. . . . However, a woman with a male subordinate should be aware that a man may feel at a disadvantage . . ." Defeel at a disadvantage . . ." De-brett's experts also warn that "a woman may have to try harder than a man in an equivalent job because male colleagues and clients are likely to be on the look-out for 'feminine' behavior, by which it meant tears and hysterical outbursts. In the "Visitors and Houseguests" chapter, Debrett's has al-most every possible situation un-der control and reminds you that, "If you are going to stay at a rather grand house that is fully staffed, it is worth bearing in mind when packing that your suitcase may be unpacked by someone else." In other words, no dirty socks. The same kind of houses raise the prickly point of who and how much to tip. The answer: tip them all, the butler, the chauffeur, the bedroom servants and the cook. How much? Ask your hostess' advice. A line on the modern butler states his first essential task of the day: to warm the car for the comfort of the employer before driving him to the railroad station to catch his train to work.

"You know this is an anniversary for me, too," Davis went on. "It's my 50th year in show business. My parents were in vaudeville and I made my debut when I was three in a very early talkie, 'Rufus Jones for President.' Then I was in a family act with my uncle, Will Mastin, on the Orpheum circuit. I learned to boof by watching Bill (Bojangles) Robinson, mimicking his every move. I've done three Broadway musicals, 'Mr. Wonderful,' 'Golden Boy' and 'Stop the World I Want to Get I've had enough of them. They consume too much time. Prior to his present rushed travels, Davis completed his first film in some years, "Cannonball," in which he is reunited with his close friend, Dean Martin, his playmate of the "rat pack" movies they made with Sinatra in the '60s.

20th-Century View

With "Bedrooms," we definitely move into the 20th century, as the experts reassure us that "The days clear-cut policy when married couples were put together and unmarried couples kept apart, have vanished. . . . It is a courtesy to put unmarried couples together," but it's up to the hostess to make the final ruling. However, Debrett's makes it clear that even so, if the hostess chooses not to put them in the same room, "she is, of course, expressing personal disap-proval unless there is some reason and this is made clear. For instance, a weekend party might include an elderly relation who would be shocked or upset by the arrangement and it is only fair to separate the couple in this case, explaining privately the reason."

Reading about pubs also has its enlightening charm, for where else would a woman find out that she can go to a West End London pub on her own but "a woman doing the same thing in the North-East would be likely to inspire catcalls from the young men, glowers from the old men and exceptionally slow and sulky service from the

A New Italian Movie Explores Filmmaking

By Thomas Quinn Curtiss International Herald Tribine

DARIS — Mario Monicelli's light comedy, "Chambre d'hôtel." spools novice cineastes at work on Opus 1.1

Movies about moviemaking and movie people have always been amusing, informative and popular. The new Italian film ("Camera d'albergo" is the original title) has zestful bounee and indirectly diagnoses certain complaints of the current cinema. A group of movie-struck youngsters, to test the range of cinem vente, place hidden cameras in the rooms of a shouldy hotel to record the behavior of the occupants. This yields them snatches of the guests' private affairs, but from these disconnected patches they find it impossible to extract an acceptable motion picture. They take their footage to an elderly producer who has long dreamed of combining documentary and fiction. He advises them to hunt down the guests they have spied upon and recruit them to act out what follows in their stories. Thus, the aw stuff of chaotic shooting may be refined by supplying it with dramatic purpose.

Monicelli has fashioned at once an allegory and a critique. His fumbling filmmakers are the ambitious directors of the post-New Wave who employ the hand-held camera out have no other resources. They know the simple technique of photography, but unlike their elders who sought to synthesize drama, composition and music on film, they know nothing of the other arts and are unable to construct a plausible script. Their only reference is to other films, of which they produce poor carbon copies, causing audiences to wonder what has happened to the movies.

In the bewhiskered producer they consult there is the ghost of inventive professionalism. Vittorio Gassman, who portrays him, is made up as Rip Van Winkle to emphasize the generation gap. The old boy has missed his opportunities, but he is no amateur and can dispense first aid to the pointless reels they, bring him. His salvation scheme has a slight touch of Pirandelloism.

Gassman lifts the farce with a fine performance as the eccentric old-timer, and Monica Vitti as the disputed lady on whom the inquisitive cameras have been turned is an expert comedienne. The analysis of the medium's methods discloses a sharp intelligence, but the low comedy resorts to flatulent women and toilet gags. Monicelli has nimble notions about cinematography, but a deficient comic sense. (At the Gaumont Les Halles, the Saint-Germain Village, the Fi sees Lincoln and the Marignan-Concorde-Pathé in Italian with French subtitles.)

"Paris Non-Stop," at the remodeled Mercury, offers a lightning introduction to the City of Light that should be a must to firsttime visitors and that will entertain residents and natives.

The vast panorama spreads over four screens on stage and to the walls of the auditorium to produce a cycloramic effect. Different images are projected simultaneously. What one has is a cram course in the history and sights of the French capital.

It opens with Claude Lelouch's camera speeding in the early dawn from Avenue Foch to the Arc de Triomphe, through narrow streets and broad boulevards and charging up Montmartre. It takes us to the Louvre, the Eiffel Tower, the markets, the Opéra, the Comédie-Française, the fashion shows, the restaurants and a boat trip on the Seine. There is a visit to Versailles; the Roman era is recalled as is the Revolution, Napoleon and the Commune. Both World Wars are forgotten except for scenes of the 1944 liberation celebrations. Its running time is 55 minutes, an impressive and exciting audiovisual glimpse of Paris.

A repertory of Shakespeare films, both English and Russian. holds the screen of the Cosmos. The program includes Olivier's "Hamlet" and Zeffirelli's "Taming of the Shrew" with Elizabeth Taylor and Richard Burton. The Soviet cinema is represented by Yutkevich's "Othello," Kozintsev's "Hamlet" and "King Lear' and Kolessov's "Taming of the Shrew," the last the only one that has not been seen abroad before.

The Russian "Shrew" in no way matches Zeffirelli's. Andrei Popov's Petruchio and Ludmila Kassetkina's Kate are commendable histrionically though they suggest photographed stage performances. The production is lackluster in unshaded black-and-white and the attempt to instill vigor by boisterous horseplay on the part of the supporting company is not happy. The adaptation shows no imagination, the delightful Christopher Sly introduction having been left out. Beside the gorgeous Zeffirelli version it has a sorry

Morality Groups Have Limited Impact on TV

By Robert Barr The Associated Press

NEW YORK - A kiss on the check is the limit of decency on Indian television. Full frontal nudity causes little stir in Yugoslavia and Australia, but one Australian show bans the word "divorce." Whatever the standards, ranging from prudish in the Soviet Union, Argentina and the Islamic world to permissive in most of Western Europe, few nations have the kind of decency campaign being waged in the United States by the Coalition for Better Television, an Associated Press survey shows.

In Britain, 18 years after Mary Whitehouse founded the National Viewers and Listeners Association to promote "spiritual and moral values" on television, viewers still adore the leering Benny Hill. Frontal nudity is occasionally shown. In Japan, television dotes on strippers and titiliating documen taries despite protests by the Parent-Teachers Association. PTA director Kengo Takeuchi admits: We haven't been too effective." He said the PTA now tries to encourage parents to monitor their children's viewing.

The Coalition for Better Television, a group sponsored in large part by Moral Majority, has asked some companies to stop sponsoring shows the group finds too violent or sexy. Cal Thomas, vice president of Moral Majority, said that plans for a boycott of sponsors would be dropped because the group had achieved many goals.

'Dallas' as a Gauge Every nation has its standards.

"Dallas" is a convenient gauge.
The exploits of J.R. Ewing are wildly popular in South Africa, but the Rev. P.J. Van Staden of the Nederduitsch Hervormde Kerk has condemned the show's "free sex" and "glorifying of thugs." "Dallas" is top-rated in Denmark, but the Radio Council panned it for "trashy" scripts and characters. In the Gulf region, the show's kisses are deleted. Many countries draw the line in children's bedrooms. "Sex, profanity, nudity, violence; you name it, it all goes," said Roland Bekking, a spokesman for the Dutch Broadcasting Foundation. "The only problem is the time it is aired." Australians have seen "Last Tango in Paris," uncut, and "Let's Go Naked," a BBC documentary about a nudism, after 8:30 p.m. But the government licensing board banned the word "divorce" on a 6 p.m. soap opera and banned the film "Taxi Driver" after President Reagan was shot by a man allegedly influenced by the film. Yugoslav viewers see it all — sex, homosexuality, profanity, full nudity. France's three governmentowned television networks are lenient about sex and nudity, but sometimes excise particularly violent movie scenes. Austrian TV showed "Last Tango" uncut, but there was a furor last year when the punk rocker,

Nina Hagen, demonstrated a mas-turbatory technique on a late-night lalk show.

Israeli TV usually permits the most provocative profanity in news and talk shows, but last week, television director Yitzhak Shimoni banned the "Happy Hooker." Xaviera Hollander, from an early evening show. In Singapore, shows are heavily censored to remove any sex, nudity or suggestion of drug addiction. "Starsky and Hutch" used to be shown, but scenes showing policemen being killed were cut.

In China, kissing, profanity and stylized violence appear on TV, but a series called "Eighteen Years Behind Enemy Lines" was critical for sharing to a series called "Eighteen Years Behind Enemy Lines" was critical for sharing to the series of the series cized for showing too much flesh - an actress doing a bathing scene in a one-piece swimsuit. Argentina's National Department of Radio and Television weeds out violence, profanity and sex. In 1978, one station was ordered to stop showing the Three Stooges for fear of inciting violence in children.

In Brazil, censors forced changes in "More Than Just Friends" because it showed the bachelor hero, Edu, doing house-work while his girlfriend worked in the city — an affront to macho sensibilities. Censors also demanded changes in an episode where Edu was carrying on an affair with a woman and her mother.

The pony roller. Too unde to be removed from any Centre Court exit!

It is rumoured that The Championships of The All England Lawn Tennis and Croquet Club were started in order to raise funds for the repair of the Club's pony roller. The roller at that time was used to maintain the croquet lawns.

What is certainly true is that, on Monday, 9th July, 1877, the 22 entrants assembled at the Wimbledon courts in Worple Road for the Men's Singles Championship (the only event).

From such inauspicious beginnings developed the most prestigious tennis championships in the world. The championship every player dreams of winning; then dreams of winning again.

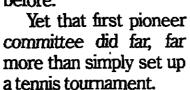

In those far-off days of the early 1870s much was done to popularise the new game by a Major Wingfield who offered for sale a

At various country houses up and down Britain, croquet rapidly went "out" and lawn tennis or "sticky", as it was

Bloodbaths, Nightmares

One of the nightmare scenarios of the Iranian revolution has always been a plunge into chaos or civil conflict that ends the central authority of the state and precipitates a military coup, a Marxist guerrilla takeover. another or a deeper foreign invasion, an ethnic secession, or something equally extreme. It is probably too early to say Iran now stands at that brink. If that scenario came, however, it would likely unreel from just the sort of bloodbaths that Iran has seen in the last few days. In quick succession, the government executed scores of people demonstrating in support of ousted president Abolhassan Bani-Sadr, and Sunday night scores of government officials, including Ayatollah Khomeini's likeliest successor, Ayatollah Mohammed Beheshti, were killed in a single ghastly bomb explosion in Tehran.

What will happen as a result of this latest round of violence obviously cannot be known. The government, which had executed hundreds of other Iranians before it took after Mr. Bani-Sadr's supporters last week, would seem to retain the capacity to deploy its regular and irregular forces against perceived enemies of the revolution. Its taste for its enemies' blood will scarcely, be diminished by the terror directed against its leaders Sunday night. At the same time, whichever individuals or groups set that explosion can hardly have intended that to be their last act in the Iranian struggle for power. As ugly as some scenes of Iran's revolution have been in the past, the worst may be yet to come.

Almost by reflex, various spokesmen of the Iranian revolution at once blamed the United States and, of course, "Zionism" for the bomb slaughter. One could say, in a patronizing way, that, well, Iran's Islamic fundamentalists are understandably upset and should be permitted their rhetorical excesses. We would say something else: The charge is a disgusting libel.

Progress at the OAU

The 18th meeting of the Organization of African Unity has just ended on a reserved but unmistakable note of triumph. In the past, an OAU session generally qualified as a success if most differences were papered over. Agreement has always been guaranteed on such obvious positions as broad opposition to South African apartheid, but conflicts between member states often seemed likely to tear the 50-member organization apart. This time, however, there were signs of progress in two of the biggest disputes dividing African nations. King Hassan of Morocco proposed a cease-fire and "controlled referendum" to determine the future of the Western Sahara, and President Mohammed Siad Barre of Somalia declared that he was ready to hold "peace negotiations" with the Ethiopian leader, Mengistu Haile Mariam, on the fate of the Ogaden.

Ever since Spain ceded the phosphate- and iron-rich Western Sahara to Morocco and Mauritania jointly in 1976, it has been a nettlesome problem for the OAU. Algeria has supported the leftist Polisario Front's efforts to establish an independent state in the large but underpopulated territory. Mauritania dropped its claim in 1979, but Morocco has fought on, and OAU members have done their best to avoid taking sides. Now comes the king's offer, which admittedly is ambiguous and has been rejected out of hand by Polisario. But it has not been rejected by Algeria. It is too early to say what results it will produce, if any, but it is the most promising initiative in the short, bitter history of the dispute. The OAU has named a committee to work out details. It might take a while to find the right formula for a referendum, but an early cease-fire should be possible.

The Ogaden has also been a thorn in the OAU's side in recent years. In some ways, it has been more troublesome than the Western Sahara because it is in the strategic Horn of Africa and therefore has attracted the interest and involvement of the superpowers.

The territory is inhabited for the most part by ethnic Somalis. But in 1977-78, Sovietsupported Cuban and Ethiopian troops defeated a Somali insurrection. There has been periodic skirmishing ever since and hundreds of thousands of Somalis have been made homeless, many of whom are starving in refugee camps. If Col. Mengistu will take up Mr. Siad Barre's offer, perhaps some way can be found at least to relieve some of the human suffering that the Ogaden conflict has caused. The Somali president has also begun talks with President Daniel Arap Moi of Kenya over a disputed border area. Mr. Siad Barre's peace initiatives may have been prompted by his troubles, but whatever the reason, they are worth pursuing.

The only regrettable development was the agreement to meet next year in Tripoli as scheduled. Just as many nations in the West regard the Libya of Moamer Qadhafi as an outlaw nation, so do many African nations, including Egypt and Sudan. President Hilla Limann of Ghana has already announced that he will boycott the meeting if it is held in Libya. Disregarding for the moment Libya's support for international terrorists, its intervention in Chad last year broke the cardinal rule of the OAU, which is to respect international boundaries, no matter how arbitrary they seem. Tripoli was a bad choice.

Values in the Caribbean

When Herbert Hoover was president, 50 years ago, the headline read: "Our Caribbean Policy Again Under Scrutiny." Two years ago, similar news: "Caribbean Still in U.S. Focus." So the recent headline was predictable: "A New Policy on Aid for Caribbean Wins Reagan's Approval."

Yes, the Caribbean basin is strategically vital to the United States. And countering Fidel Castro's Communism does require something more than shipping arms to "friendly" even if authoritarian states. But rediscovering these old truths will not be very effective if the Reagan team tries to sell its plan to America's neighbors as a scheme to promote private investment and tighten regional security.

The president wisely played down ideology in persuading Mexico to support a joint economic aid program for the Caribbean islands and Central America. Reagan thus appeared to understand another basic fact of life that aid to poor nations is more acceptable if its sources are genuinely multilateral and the priorities are fixed by a relatively disinterested agency like the World Bank. But that commitment is still tentative and will be tested by the administration's readiness to increase U.S. aid without imposing security conditions.

Caribbean leaders are urging a $3-billion annual effort, which would double the present level of assistance. If the donors include Mexico, Venezuela and Canada, as well as Europe and Japan, that target is realistic. The additional U.S. contribution would need to be at least $300 million, double the direct aid thus far requested by the administration. Given the size and diversity of the region, that is not a huge sum. The trick will be to get the money from Congress and to assure that it is spent wisely.

Some 22 million people in 31 countries in the Caribbean basin face a common problem of paying more for energy and getting less for the basic commodities they produce. But their development depends on effective domestic programs that generate jobs and stimulate exports. The World Bank has begun to define priorities for the scattered Caribbean islands, but no comparable plan exists for turbulent Central America.

The region's economic distress obviously breeds political instability and swells the tide of illegal migrants to the United States. Wellplanned aid, therefore, is an investment in national security.

What makes little sense is for Washington to focus obsessively on Fidel Castro's Cuba to justify such regional aid. Castro may have an ally in Marxist Grenada (108.000 people on 133 square miles) and has associated himself with guerrilla opponents of repressive right-wing regimes, but he has been unable to develop any firm strategic alliances; his sympathizers have fared poorly in key elections in the West Indies.

Jamaican voters rebuffed a left-leaning. pro-Cuban prime minister six months ago and gave power to Edward Seaga, a conservative and free marketeer. And Seaga, the first head of government to visit Reagan, says he cannot "at this time" blame Cuba for active subversion in the Caribbean. This is shrewd advice. Magnifying the Cuban menace can only demean a promising venture and is no favor to the region's elected leaders. Why not make democracy the political touchstone of Caribbean aid? How refreshing if American values instead of weapons could be stressed for a change.

PARIS -- Tehran's bloody Sunday, when 72 leaders of the Islamic republic perished, should no doubt be seen as a terrorist exploit. The episode reaches a new height in Iran's spiraling political violence. However, it must also be seen as a reaction to the regime's recently intensified campaign of repression.

Some of the turbaned heads that rolled Sunday were directly responsible for a campaign that has brought more than 100 executions and about 5,000 arrests in the last 10 days alone.

The new wave of repression fol-lowed scores of executions and political murders that have not been reported internationally. In the past few weeks more than 30 persons have been "eliminated by be-lievers" in the Gulf city of Bandar-Lingeh, 20 have been shot by local vigilante committees in Kashmar, and more than 200 have been shot in various Sistan and Baluchistan cities. In Rasht and Chalus, on the Caspian, the death toll reached 100 in the week before President Bani-Sadr was deposed.

'Graveyard'

While the defiant survivors of the carnage on Sunday speak of "adequate revenge" in accordance with Islamic tradition, the republic's opponents decry massacres that they say have reached genoci-

Bani-Sadr, in a tape-recorded message, accuses the ruling mul-lahs of "mass murder, unprece-dented in our history." He claims that the theocracy plans to "turn the country into a vast graveyard."

Ali Amini, a former premier, has issued a statement accusing the government of "mass killings of our youth in the streets." He claims that "foreign mercenaries" are involved, apparently a reference to rumors that Palestinian gunmen have been employed by the government to beef up its now unreliable security forces.

The veteran nationalist leader Mohsen Pezeshkpour, who played a key role in bringing the shah down, says the republic is already guilty of genocide against ethnic and religious minorities and "all those Iranians who believe in their national identity."

'Leniency'

Pezeshkpour, who was spokesman for the Iran Bar Association for 12 years, says in a letter to United Nations Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim that a "Cambodiastyle genocide" is being plotted by Iran's clerical rulers.

Tehran authorities alternately blame or praise themselves for "our Islamic leniency" in dealing with the opposition, which now spans a wide spectrum.

Ayatollah Moussavi Ardabili, who has replaced the assassinated strongman Ayatollah Mohammed Beheshti as chief justice, says that the republic has not been "firm enough." He says that while the Bolsheviks "eliminated 10 million miscreants to create their ideal society," the Islamic republic has executed "no more than a few hundred, a few thousand at most."

The official figure for political executions in the last 27 months of the republic's existence is less than 2,000. But the opposition claims that most of the estimated 8,000 others who have been shot on various "social" or "moral" charges were also eliminated for political

The public would not inevitably expect such results from a summit, nor would it panic if they were not achieved. If the officials made very clear beforehand that the purpose was simply to give each side a chance to explain its concerns and to lis-ten, then that result would be enough. Of course the two leaders would disagree, but it would help even if they came away with nothing more than a better understandng of each other's attitudes:

Start of Dialogue

Washington says it s seeking "real détente" and strategic balance, but the message comes through with a good deal of beligerent static. It should be made clear at the top, even though it isn't yet clear just how these goals will be defined.

Moscow could give a better sense of its own guidelines. It has never publicly defined its strategy, as NATO has. Brezhnev has said repeatedly that he wants an early meeting. There is no reason for Reagan to lack confidence in his ability to set terms that make a summit obvi-ously the beginning of a dialogue, not a commitment.

Technical arms negotiations can no longer bear the weight of estab-lishing a climate of East-West stability. There needs to be a new display of political will to live on the same planet. Without it, alliances lose their reliability and danger is not held off. It increases.

The World Bank's Next Era

By Hobart Rowen

WASHINGTON — The resignation as president of the World Bank of Robert S. McNamara who hands over Wednesday to Alden W. Clausen, the former Bank of America boss, is the end of an era. For the last 13 years the sprawling International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (the formal name) has truly been "McNamara's Bank." It has reflected the Vietnam-era defense secretary's deep and emotional commitment to the problems of the Third World and to eradication of poverty in the poor nations. Loan Growth

When McNamara moved from the Pentagon to the bank in 1968, the bank was lending less than $1 billion. At $11.5 billion in new loans in 1980, the bank has become the world's largest supplier of development money.

But the growth of the World

Bank's scope, which McNamara believes must continue through the 1980s, gives the jitters to conservative critics, many of whom have come to power under Ronald Reagan. Influential Reagan advisers charge that although the Unit-ed States has the biggest single money stake in the bank, the management is not sufficiently influ-enced by the United States, and the bank therefore is not an efficient agency for carrying out U.S. strategic policy abroad.

The qualitative change under McNamara is clear enough. Start-ing in 1973, the bank began to focus on rural development, world poverty, population control, slum upgrading, health and nutrition. This move away from the postwar emphasis on more traditional projternational welfare program.

Management and Budget, David A. Stockman, tried to revoke the Carter administration's pledge of $3.2 billion for the World Bank's soft-loan agency over the next three years. The State Department succeeded in reinstating the $3.2 billion on a stretched out basis. Key officials say it is doubtful there will be another U.S. replenishment after the $3.2 billion is used up. Whether the bank or any other multilateral agency should be considered a vehicle for carrying out the foreign policy of the United States or any other nation is a sep-arate issue. That view has not been held by preceding administrations, and it is certain to be fought by America's partners and within the bureaucracy of the bank itself. In an interview that caused tremors in the less developed world a few weeks ago, Treasury Undersecretary Beryl Sprinkel ex-pressed doubt whether the World Bank is serving U.S. interests, and wondered whether the bank's government-to-government mode of operation did not encourage socialism at the expense of the private enterprise system. McNamara, as he moves back into private life, is deeply disturbed by what he regards as a senseless attempt to undercut the bank. He rejects the "socialism" charge as uninformed. His main concern is that the world is up against a serious "financial disequilibrium," and that presidents and prime ministers are not facing up to that reality.

Among McNamara's chief disappointments is the determination ects frightens the conservative of the Reagan administration, so community, which sees social experimentation and a bottomless in- "energy affiliate" for the World Bank that the Carter administration supported at the Venice sum-The director of the Office of mit last year. The energy affiliate, which is sure to be debated again at the Ottawa summit this month, would promote production of oil and other energy sources in the less developed world.

Although the Reagan crowd clearly is hostile to the energy affi-liate, Clausen did not hesitate to tell me in an interview on June 4 in Lausanne, Switzerland, that he is "attracted" to the idea, which he thinks would be highy successful in raising money for energy devel-opment in the Third World.

Test for Clausen

Clausen is well aware that there is hostility to the bank inside the administration, and outside among some of the more ideological pro-Reagan extremists who keep up a drumfire for way-out economic solutions. He knows, as well, that some of these conservative forces would much have preferred as McNamara's successor someone like former Treasury Secretary William E. Simon, who is committed to reining in, not expanding, the bank's role.

Clausen, however, does not appear to have taken the job to preside over the bank's dissolution: He told me that he favors expanding the present "gearing ratio" of the bank, which presently limits the amount of outstanding loans to the ultra-conservative one-to-one ratio with total capital. He exudes the confidence befitting the former head of the world's largest commercial banking enterprise, But Clausen faces a determined antibank mind-set in Reagan's Washington that will test not only his skills, but his innate good humor. Japan, Soviet Union Agree on Oil-Gas Project

TOKYO — The Soviet Union and Sakhalin Oil Development Cooperation (Sodeco) agreed on an oil and natural gas development project on the Sakhalin shelf, beginning in autumn, 1982, to start production from 1988, a Sodeco consortium spokesman said Tuesday.

The consortium, set up in 1974 to finance the project, includes the Japan National Oil Corp., C Itoh and Co., Marubeni, Idemitsu Kosan and the Industrial Bank of Japan. Sodeco has estimated that half of the gas and oil extracted will be delivered to Japan.

General Dynamics Exploring Airbus Deal From Agency Dispard

PARIS — General Dynamics has held "exploratory" talks about participating in the development of a new aircraft by Airbus Industrie. Airbus officials on Tuesday confirmed contacts by St. Louis-based General Dynamics to discuss the possibility of its participation in the consortium's recently announced A-320 project for the development of a short-to-medium range commercial aircraft. First deliveries are scheduled for the end of 1985 or early 1986.

A spokesman for the U.S. company said the it has held "exploratory conversations with Airbus Industrie in order to understand their planning for the A-320 program." He added that this was as "far as we have gone and we do not know what the next step will be."

Litton Wins Antitrust Case Against AT&T New York Times Service

NEW YORK - A jury has awarded more than $92 million to Litton Systems, a unit of Litton Industries, after a five-month civil trial on antitrust charges that Litton had brought against American Telephone & Telegraph and several of its telephone units.

A spokesman for AT&T said the company would appeal Monday's decision and award. Damages in antitrust cases are automatically tripled under Federal laws, so that AT&T could be compelled to pay more than $276 million to Litton if the jury's award is not overturned on appeal.

The jury found that AT&T used monopolistic tactics to force Litton Business Telephones Systems, a wholly owned subsidiary of Litton Systems, out of the office telephone equipment business in 1974.

Matsushita Electric Raises Spending Plan

OSAKA, Japan - Matsushita Electric Industrial said Tuesday it has raised its planned capital outlay for the business year ending Nov. 30 to 80 billion yen ($3.5 billion) from the 65 billion yen originally planned. It spent 47 billion yen spent last year.

The company said the capital spending will be concentrated on facilities for making video equipment, including video cassette recorders, and on research and development.

Peugeot Cuts Back Its Forecasts for 1981

PARIS — Automobiles Peugeot and Automobiles Citroën no longer expect the clear improvement in 1981's trading results forecast last month, Peugeot group chairman Jean-Paul Parayre said Tuesday.

He told the annual meeting that since mid-May the slow recovery in the French market has halted, potential buyers are holding back and interest rates have risen sharply.

He said investments will drop sharply this year, as expected, after reaching a record 5.6 billion francs ($979 million at current prices) in 1980. He gave no forecast for the 1981 figure. The fall will not affect investments earmarked for new products, Mr. Parayre said.

Leutwiler Discounts Effect Of Fiduciary Deposit Tax

BERNE — Fritz Leutwiler, president of the Swiss National Bank, of 2.10 Swiss francs, where the dollar was in the first half of june, as a vowed to continue overproducing than 10 million barrels a said Tuesday he doubts assertions by Swiss banks that a proposed 5-percent withholding tax on fiduci to bring the rapid proliferation of cans to bring their prices more in line with Saudi Arabia's $32-a-barary deposit interest would drive those customers elsewhere.

Mr. Leutwiler said foreigners are attracted to fiduciary accounts with Swiss banks by the security and discretion they afford. Foreigners are willing to give up some of the interest they receive in return for the security of these services, he said in a speech to the Association of Foreign Banks in Switzerland.

Mr. Leutwiler said it is understandable that the state should look to the largely flourishing banks when seeking new revenue to reduce its budget deficit.

Supervision Urged

Fiduciary funds are invested on Eurocurrency markets at the customer's risk but in the name of the Swiss bank. The proposed tax has been defeated in the upper house of parliament, but the lower house voted two weeks ago to give it detailed consideration.

Growth of fiduciary business would slow if banks supervised it as carefully as they do the business that is included in their balance sheets, Mr. Leutwiler said.

That would be welcomed by the central bank since the rapid growth and high volume of fiduciary accounts causes it some con-cern, although it has not so far directly endangered monetary or exchange-rate policy, he said.

Fiduciary liablities of Swiss banks rose to nearly 150 billion Swiss francs ($73.89 billion) at the of end March from 54 billion Swiss francs in 1978.

On other matters, Mr. Leutwiler forecast that the dollar will fall in a few weeks or months from its present level of about 2.03 Swiss francs. He said he considers a rate

This rule, which at present applies just to banks, prevents foreign institutions from opening branches in Switzerland unless Swiss banks have the same privi-leges in the foreign banks' home reinvested at the customer's risk, the banks take, at least theoretically, some risks, Mr. Leutwiler said. Fiduciary investments are usually handled by the banks on the ba-is made, he noted.

No court has yet determined where the liability lies for choosing the debtor with which the investment funds are placed, he said. Theoretically, Swiss banks can transfer a fiduciary claim on a foreign bank to the fiduciary customer if the foreign bank cannot pay, Mr. Leutwiler said.

However, he doubted whether this would happen in practice, since this would oblige fiduciary customers to make direct contact with the foreign bank. They would not wish to do this since it is the security and discretion of opera-ting through a Swiss bank that draws them to fiduciary accounts in the first place, he said. The banks would thus probably have to take action themselves on behalf of their fiduciary clients against a defaulting foreign bank, Mr. Leutwiler said.

To Cut Price Of Some Oil

First African State To Reduce Prices

By Thomas L. Friedman

New York Timer Service

NEW YORK — Nigeria has agreed to sell a group of Zurich-based oil traders 100,000 barrels of oil a day beginning Wednesday at $37.50 a barrel, a Nigerian oil industry source said Monday.

The deal marks a discount of $2.50 a barrel from Nigeria's offi-

$2.50 a barrel from Nigeria's official contract price and is the first solid indication that any of the African producers might be willing to lower prices substantially.

The report comes a week after Nigeria, Algeria and Libya whose oil is the highest priced among all members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries — had said they would not drop their official prices of $40 to $41 a barrel, despite being under heavy pressure due to the sharp decline in demand for oil in general and their oil in particular. Industry officials cautioned, however, that there was no indica-tion yet that Nigeria was ready to offer a similar discount to the major oil companies, which buy most its current production of 850,000 barrels a day.

The companies, whose contracts are up for review July 1, were said to be engaged in tough discussions with the Nigerians and other African oil producers.

$3.50-Cut Sought

The companies have threatened to drastically reduce purchases of oil from Nigeria if its government does not offer a substantial price reduction since refiners are losing about $3.50 on every barrel of African oil they buy because current market conditions do not allow them to pass the full cost on to their customers.

Industry sources said Tuesday in Rome that Libya has officially notified Italian customers it will charge an unchanged $40 a barrel for third quarter oil deliveries, Reuters reported. The companies are likely to substantially cut their Libyan purchases if that price is maintained, the sources added.]

Company officials have also said that Mexico, if it goes ahead with a reported price increase of $2 a barrel Wednesday, would find few takers for its oil.

"We told the Mexicans," a major U.S. oil company executive said, "that if they go through with the proposed $2-a-barrel increase their oil will not be attractive to us and we will back away from all or a large portion of our entitle-

China Delays Oil Project Bids

By James P. Sterba

PEKING - China's effort to reverse its rapidly declining production of energy has suffered another setback with the disclosure over the weekend that plans to solicit bids from foreign oil companies to begin exploratory drilling in the South China Sea have been shelved for at least another year.

With oil production stagnating and coal output declining, energy shortages are plaguing China's mod-ernization efforts. Thousands of factories are operating below capacity because they cannot get enough Discoveries in the South China Sea are regarded as essential to reviving a petrochemical industry, sup-plying oil to basic industry and earning foreign exchange.

But, according to Willard C. Butcher, chairman of Chase Manhattan Bank, Petroleum Ministry officials told him on Saturday that their inability to formulate acceptable policies on contracts and taxes had forced another delay in the solicitation of bids for the South China Sea drilling until "at best" the first quarter of

46 Firms in Running

Mr. Butcher, who was in Peking to open a branch of the bank, estimated that resolving the tax and con-tract issues would mean a delay until the summer and perhaps early next fall of 1982.

After three earlier postponements this year, 46 oil companies from 13 countries, which have completed seismic studies of the area and turned them over to the Chinese for analysis, were hoping to submit competitive bids this fall, receive concessions in November and begin drilling exploration wells early next

Although most oil companies are waiting to see what terms the Chinese will offer for South China Sea exploration, they have suggested privately that the current glut in oil production worldwide has not been understood by the Chinese and that some companies might lose interest if bureaucratic delays in Foreign oil company officials here said they be-lieved the Petroleum Ministry was hesitant to make decisions because it was under close political scrutiny from senior Chinese officials for past mistakes.

New Economic Plan

A new five-year economic plan was disclosed last week in which slow economic growth, the development of light industry and limited foreign investment were stressed. But the plan assumes a turnabout in energy production in the mid-1980s without considering the effects of current exploration detays in the South China Sea.

Gobain Asks U.S. Factory Orders Rise; Resignation Leading Index Plunges

By Axel Krause nal Herald Tribune

PARIS - Roger Fauroux, chairman of Saint-Gobain, one of France's largest industrial groups, has asked for the resignation of Jean-Pierre Brulé, chairman of CII-Honeywell Bull, a French-U.S. computer company in which Saint-Gobain controls a 53-percent shareholding.

Mr. Brule said, however, that he had no immediate plans to step down, thus setting the stage for a possible boardroom battle.

Its outcome could have ramifications not only for the CII-Honeywell, but also for Honeywell Information Systems of the United States, which owns 47 percent of the CII Honeywell, company and banking sources in Paris said.

A Saint-Gobain official said

Tuesday that the request for Mr. Brulé's resignation "was motivated by divergencies over management and industrial strategy." But he declined to confirm examples of Mr. Brulé's alleged smanagement contained in an article published Tuesday by Le Monde, a Paris daily.

He and a company spokesman stressed that under French practice the naming or dismissal of a company chairman is the responsibility of the board of directors and not of a shareholder.

Well-placed company and banking sources said that if Mr. Brulé refused to resign, the issue would be put to a vote by the board of CII-Honeywell Bull, probably by the end of the week. They also said that, given the 11-member board's composition, Mr. Brulé had little choice but to resign.

The board includes Mr. Brulé, two representatives of the French government plus eight members who are either employed by or friendly to the two main shareholders, including Mr. Fauroux of St. Gobain, and William W. George and William R. Smart, ex-

"The Example of the property will also be French government will also be watching this closely and may act," he added.

Both Saint-Gobain and CII-Honeywell Bull have been repeat-edly singled out for nationalization by Socialist members of the Mitterrand government.

However, senior French govern-ment officials stressed Tuesday that the nationalization issue and Mr. Brulé's conflict with Mr. Fauroux were not related and that the government will probably stay out of the corporate battle. The officials noted that Jacques

Delors, minister of the economy and finance, said in a radio interview Saturday that the government wants to avoid intervening directly in the strategies of industrial com-panies. "This means leaving such issues as those facing Saint-Gobain and CII-Honeywell Bull up to their boards and shareholders," a government official said

Elf: Why It Will Accept Half a Loaf

taine's perspective, the clicke that half a cake is better than none is being played out on a grand scale as the huge French oil and chemical company attempts to take over Texasguif Inc. Texasgulf, a chemicals, mining, and oil and gas company based in Stamford, Conn., owns the Kidd Creek mine, near Timmons, Ontario, an awesomely productive source of zinc, copper and silver that some analysts believe is the world's single most valuable mine.

It is the kind of property that makes a cash-rich oil company looking to acquire a natural resources company drool.

Major U.S. Position

Nevertheless, if Elf is successful in the takeover bid it initiated Friday, it intends to surrender Kidd Creek to the Canada Development Corp., along with assorted ancillary mines, potash interests, and oil and gas properties that Texas-gulf owns in Canada

When the dust settles from a series of transactions valued at about $5 billion, Elf will have bartered these properties for the support of the Canadian investment firm in Elf's bid for Texasgulf. Canada Development owns 37 percent of Texasguif's common stock
Analysts are convinced that Elf will not regret its strategy, which will leave it with 57.5 percent of the assets of Texasgulf, enough to constitute the major U.S. acquisi-tion Elf has been seeking for more than a year. Through its EA Development subsidiary, Ef has offered to pay $50 a share for the 63 percent of TexasgulPs common stock not owned by Canada Development, and $159.37 a share for preferred stock. The total value of the bid is $2.5 billion, if all shareholders re-

That investment would give Elf a major position in the U.S. fertilizer industry and promising oil and gas properties in the Gulf of Mexico.

"I think Elf is paying up in or-der to transfer assets from Canada to the United States," said I. Clar-ence Morrison, an analyst at Dean Witter Reynolds, referring to Elf's agreement to sell its own oil interests to Canada Development in a related transaction, and its intention to use that money to help pay for the takeover of Texasgulf. But, he added, "Texasguif's agricultural chemical lines have significant long-term potential and it is just a matter of time before Elf recovers

"The phosphate and sulfur property in Texasgulf's fertilizer business is, by itself, worth more than the bid," agreed Peter Butler, an analyst at Paine Webber Mitch-

last year produced earnings of $168.3 million on sales of $662.5 million, both records for the company. That was just over half of the company's total earnings of $325.6 million on revenue of $1.09 billion. Analysts say that Texasgulf is the second-leading producer of sulfur, behind Freeport Minerals, the third- or fourth-largest pro-ducer of phosphates, and the fifth-largest producer of soda ash.

Because these chemicals are the basic ingredients of fertilizers, analysts describe Texasgulf as "well positioned" to benefit from what some companies believe will be a food crisis in the coming decades. Elf would be getting the most valuable long-term phosphate re-source this nation has," said Stuart Crane, an analyst at Fahnestock & Co., referring to Texasguif's rapidexpanding mining and processing complex at Lee Creek, N.C.

Also expanding is the company's oil and gas presence in the Gulf of Mexico. Last year, Texasgulf's oil and gas sales rose 51.3 percent from 1979, to $35.7 million, and net income more than doubled, to $5.8 million from $2.8

Betrayed Feeling

All of this has to please Elf. Its attempt last summer to interest Kerr-McGee, the Oklahoma oil company, received a very cold shoulder. Elf, which is 67 percent political implications on the home front of engaging in a very public battle to invest abroad.

Texasgulf executives, who re-portedly feel betrayed by Canada Development, are said to be no more enthusiastic than Kerr-McGee was. Richard D. Mollison, the company's chairman and chief executive officer, was on the phone to H. Anthony Hampson, a Texasgulf director who is also the chief executive of Canada Development, when the news of Elf's bid was re-

"I didn't notice any melted phone on the desk, but I don't think you could call his reaction cordial," he said.

Most analysts feel Canada Development's backing for the take-over leaves few options for Texas-

[A Texasgulf spokesman said Tuesday that the company was "exploring ways to oppose the takeover," Reuters reported from Toronto, but he added that "I don't know whether we'll fight or not." The Texasgulf board is to meet Thursday to review the Elf

Clausen Stresses U.S. 'Vested Interest' in World Bank

By Clyde H. Farnsworth New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - Alden Winship Clausen, who takes over Wednesday as president of the World Bank, stresses that it is in the "vested interest" of the United States to support the institution, which lends to the Third World, and warns that congressional re-luctance to provide adequate funding threatens its survival

"If we can help the Third World countries expand their economies, ours will also expand, and there will be more jobs in the United States," said Mr. Clausen, who is leaving his job as chairman of the Bank of America to succeed Robert S. McNamara as the World Rank's sixth chief executive.

He noted that one-third of U.S. exports are bought by developing countries. "That's the vested interest I'm talking about," he declared in a recent interview. "The (World) Bank makes so much common sense that it seems that other reasonable people with like common sense will see what we're trying to do," he added.

He said he was concerned, not about Reagan administration support for the World Bank, but about the reluctance of conservative members of both parties in the House of Representatives to back administration proposals for fund-ing. Without U.S. support, he said, the institution, which is owned by 139 nations, is in danger of unrav-

Private Sector Strategy The 58-year-old banker described the new job as a "step up on challenge" and himself as acutely sensitive to the "voracious" needs of the Third World for development assistance. He left little doubt, however, that he would proceed on a course somewhat different from that laid out by his predecessor - for example by trying to marshal more of the resources of the private sector into the business of development.

"I'm a private sector person. I'm biased to maximizing. I'm biased to help starting at home. I'm biased to bailing in. I don't want to bail out anything," he asserted. Citing recent economic success es of Argentina, Chile, Peru, South Korea, Singapore and Hong Kong, he said that "getting the economi momentum going for the private sector is a good way to achieve economic development."

He conceded that the job of running the bank has begun to look a lot bigger than it did last October when he was appointed under a pre-election agreement between

Ronald Reagan and Jimmy Carter. "The horse is bucking a bit harder than I had anticipated, but my job is to get on it and try to

It was a reference to the troubles the bank faces as it seeks support of its largest stockholder, the United States, for a mission that is to make loans, some at practically no interest, to nearly 100 developing

The bank lent some $12 billion last year on transportation, power, agriculture and other development projects in the poorer countries. In taking over from Mr. McNamara, in whose 13-year tenure the bank's lending expanded twelvefold, Mr. Clausen said he saw "both consolidation aand further growth" but added tht continued growth of the dimensions of the last 12 years would be "unsus-"If it is true that there is growing reluctance of supporter nations to support multilateral aid, then that aid may have to slow down. But the need is not diminishing in any way. The appetite is vora-

One way to address that need, he said, may be to attract more private sector capital to World Bank-supported projects. He noted that for every $1 the bank puts into a soft-loan affiliate, known as the In-ternational Development Associa-tion (IDA), accepted by the project, it now attracts $3 to $4 from outside. "Can we make that $5 and $6? I think that clearly I want to explore that."

Mr. Clausen made it clear that he considered his main job to be

Reagan 'Supportive'

'I think that the people of the United States don't know anything about the World Bank. Even the large commercial bankers of the United States don't know much about the World Bank, and they should. We have to get people to understand what the World Bank can do, and what it means to them in their own communities. Then this will translate itself to Congress. And Congress needs to

He said that contrary to popular belief the Reagan administration was "very supportive" of the bank. He noted, "The president was for a number of years my governor in California, and a good one. I know the media has said that the Reagan administration is anti-World Bank. I don't believe that." But the administration has so far had trouble getting its recommended funding for the bank's soft-loan affiliate, known as the InHouse, IDA makes loans to the world's poorest countries repayable over 50 years at no interest and only a small service fee.

The administration is seeking a $3.24 billion appropriation to cover an U.S. commitment, made during the Carter administration, for a $12 billion IDA lending program over this year, 1982 and 1983.

The Senate has approved the recommendation, but the House has stretched appropriations out over the next five years. "The administration recommen dation is the very minimum that Congress can do," said Mr. Clausen, adding that "if it goes below that, we are in danger of going back to square one."

He said the next two or three years would be "absolutely critical" because of projected slower world economic growth and high

New Highs and Lows Japan's Jobless Grows

United Press International TOKYO — Unemployment in Japan rose to 1.32 million persons, or 2.39 percent of the work force, in May, the premier's office said Tuesday. It said the jobless rate is the highest in 10 years, surpassing the previous high of 2.36 percent registered in September, 1978.

BY ORDER OF THE UNITED STATES BANKRUPTCY COURT NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA, CASE NO. 3-81-00111

in re: ITEL CORPORATION.

a Delaware corporation, Debtor.

NOTICE OF CLAIMS BAR DATE (Last Date to File Claims), AND OF CLAIMS PROCEDURE

TO: CREDITORS AND EQUITY SECURITY HOLDERS OF ITEL CORPORATION AND TO ANY PERSON OR GOVERNMENTAL UNIT THAT ASSERTS A CLAIM AGAINST THE DEBTOR, ITEL CORPORATION:

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE: The United States Bankruptcy Court for the Northern District of California (Honorable Lloyd King, presiding) has entered its Order requiring all entities that assert claims against Itel Corporation or any of the entities listed on the list of "Other Names" published in this publication on February 3, 1981, and that wish to vote on a plan or to share in this estate to file proofs of claim on or before 4:30 p.m., P.D.T..JULY 31, 1981, or be FOREVER BARRED from sharing in this estate or being treated as a creditor for purposes of voting or distribution.

This claim filing requirement applies to all prepetition claims (claims that arose before January 19, 1981). However, claims for principal or interest under the debtor's public or guaranteed (Eurobond) debentures have been exempted from the claim filing requirement, and need not file proofs of claim now, as long as the only claim asserted is for principal and interest under the debenture. Holders of the debtor's preferred or common stock need not file proofs of interest with respect to their stock now. However, if any stockholder asserts a claim against or equity interest in the debtor other than one evidenced by and based only on the shares of stock. a proof of such claim or interest must be filed as described

All claims must be filed in duplicate, and may be filed by mail with the Clerk. United States Bankruptcy Court, Room 17409. 450 Golden Gate Avenue, San Francisco, California 94102 or by delivery to the Clerk at that address. A full copy of the Court's Order may be obtained from the Clerk of the Court. or by writing to: Bar Order, Itel Corporation Litigation Support Division. Two Embarcadero Center, Suite 1600, San Francisco. California 94111. United States of America.

is still not a part of acceptable reality. One could point to the rapidity with which the war has died as a subject of discussion, or to the hostility that its veterans have reported encountering while trying to return to civilian life. or - to be overly subjective, perhaps - to the resistance one feels at the prospect of reading two more books about the war.

In any case, to make the war seem more real (or perhaps to expiate his guilt for forgetting it) this reader felt compelled to overcome his resistance and read "Nam" and "Everything We Had," two oral histories of the U.S. experience in Vietnam. The first is by Mark Baker, a noncombatant who nevertheless feels a wound inflicted by the war on his entire generation. The second is by Al Santoli, a muchdecorated veteran infantryman who is now a poet, actor and theatrical direc-

After all, what could be more real at this late date than to hear about the war from the American men and women who actually fought it? Who can tell us better about the heat and fear of arriving suddenly in-country at Cam Ranh Bay than the "grunts" who lived and fought through it? Who can convey more vividly what it was like to be isolated and tortured as a pris-oner of war than the actual victims? Who can hit us more stunningly with the perversity of the violence induced by the war than a soldier who came to take a distinct kind of pleasure at lit-erally dipping his hands in his com-rade's blood?

What is more, when one reads "Nam" and "Everything We Had" back to back, their voices merge into a sort of Greek chorus that recounts the experience of the war from the begin ning of mindless enlistment all the way to the end of coming home and trying to rejoin civilization. Actually, Mark Baker's "Nam" by itself constitutes a choral history, because its voices remain anonymous and are dove-tailed so as to lend different shadings to every phase of the U.S. experience in Vietnam. By contrast, the witnesses in "Everything We Had" are identi-fied by name and further individual-ized with brief biographies and photo-

Yet reading the two books together still enhances the choral effect, if only because their respective experiences blend so consistently. For example, in both books veterans who happen to have been Black Muslims repeatedly testify that once they found them-selves in combat, the issue of race evaporated completely. For a more remarkable example of coincidence, each book's former prisoner of war describes almost precisely the same mental exercises employed to pass the time in solitary isolation, including the recollection of one's life in minute of one's dream house from foundation to rafters.

Nevertheless, for all the detail and horror of "Nam" and "Everything We Had," there is something tedious about the experience of reading them. Or to put a finer point on it, this reader found himself extremely restless

Alas, we have read it all before, from the stories of Vietnamese children who were turned into boobytraps by the Vietcong to the reports of wanton rape and nurder by U.S. soldiers driven mad by the clusiveness of the ene-

The second explanation is that the testimony of these books is simply too painful to accept as reality. Oh, sure, we can tune in for a paragraph or a page or even a chapter. But we can also tune out, and the greatest horroof. of any war is not being able to tune out, the relentlessness of being there, even if you can dull your senses with drugs, as so many testify to having been able to do in Vietnam. We who were not there can turn this testimony back into print on the page, and dis-cover that our minds have wandered to more palatable subjects. Perhaps the best measure of the dis-tance between a reader and the voices in these books is the testimony in Nam" of veterans who, for reasons of survivor guilt or other mysterious quirks of human psychology, found it unbearable to have to give up Vietnam when they were finally dis-charged. That, to someone who did not live through the war from day to day, is not only unrealistic to imagine; it is simply unbearable. In the same way, perhaps, these books are unbear-

BRIDGE

MANY of the inventors of new bridge bidding systems, particularly the esoteric relay languages, are not eager to rush into print. They know they would have few followers, so the sales of a book would not be substantial. And they do not relish having to play against their own methods, which they think gives them an edge.

This does not mean that they conceal information from their opponents, which would be highly improper. On the contrary, they are scrupulously careful to give the opponents all the information they need. But nobody can learn a system simply by playing against it.

The diagramed deal played recently in Australia presents an interesting playing problem in the optimistic con-tract of seven spades. If a club is led, where should South win the first trick?

In slam auctions, relay bidders are on the target more often than stan-dard bidders, but not all the time. On this occasion they came unstuck after an auction that is not available. Standard bidders might suffer the same fate by the route shown.

Most players in seven spades might instinctively feel it right to win the first trick in the dummy with the club king. South did so, and played the spade ace, collecting the nine. The closed hand was entered with a diamond lead, and the spade seven was led for a winning finesse.

South cashed his remaining diamond winner and repeated the trump finesse. Then he ruffed a diamond and tried to run clubs. West ruffed the fourth round with his last trump and dummy overruffed. Now South had only 12 bricks, and the grand slam failed.

South had gone wrong from the start, but it was far from easy to foresee what would happen. He should have won the first trick with the cinb jack, saving the king as an entry to duminy. Then he would have been

By Alan Truscott able to play as he actually did, but with the ability to reach dummy at the

The spade ace would take the secand trick, and the diamond winners would be cashed. Two trump finesses would leave the lead in dummy, and a diamond would be ruffed with South's last trump. Now a club to the king would allow South to extract the missing trump, and he would have the ace of hearts as an entry to his hand to score the last four tricks with club

The famous Australian player-writer who was responsible for this slight overbid and delicate underplay sight overma and dencate underplay did not, as one might expect, try to forget the whole affair as quickly as possible. He described it in his magazine Australian Bridge, and was happy with the reaction of one expert: Who needs Relay to reach rotten grand slams? I can find rotten grand slams perfectly well with my present system." system."

In Thursday's semis, Connors will meet defending champion Bjorn Borg, who downed Peter-McNamara of Australia, 7-6, 6-2,

The other semifinalists are Rod Frawley of Australia, who had won only five matches in 12 tournaments leading up to Wimbledon but ended the run of rookie U.S. pro Tim Mayotte, 4-6, 7-6, 7-6, 6-3 victory, and second-seeded John McEuroe, who knocked off un-seeded Johan Kriek of South Afri-Ca. 6-1, 7-5, 6-1. It was a close call for No. 3 seed Connors, whose ability to go the full distance changed apparent de-feat into triumph in front of a packed Center Court crowd.

Early Disadvantage

Playing beautiful tennis, the unseeded Amritraj, who had beaten Connors in their last two meetings. started impressively, wrapping up the opening set on the back of service breaks in the second and eighth games. The 6-3 Indian Davis Cup player was given almost open license at the net, with Connors missing opportunities for the passing shots usually a hallmark of his game.

But when Connors broke service in the first game of the second set, it looked as if his touch had remmed. His double-fisted backhand began to have more bite and raking forehand cross-court drives left Amritraj flat-footed.

Connors' new life did not last long, however, and Amritraj broke back to 3-3 on his sixth break point when the American's attempted backhand lob landed beyond the baseline.

Connors was given few opportunities to attack the Indian's serve and it was Connors who gave way again in the 12th game, which he lost to love with a double-fault.

Connors was two sets down; Amritraj, who got within two points of beating Borg two years ago, looked as if he would become the first Indian to make the semifinais since the great Ramanathan Krishnan 20 years ago,

Fighter

But Connors, with a tradition of fighting right up to the final bell, had other ideas. A spectacular running forehand pass, played from outside the alley, gave him the break for a 3-2 lead in the third set and he held on to his advantage to keep his hopes alive.

til Connors came through in a rush of the next 17 points to run away with the set and force a decider.

Amritraj collapsed like a house of cards against an inspired Connors, who produced a bewildering array of sparkling winners, varying from explosive passing shots down both lines to tantalizingly-played lobs that even had Amritraj applauding at one point.

Borg needed only I hour, 46 minutes to beat McNamara and capture his 40th straight Wimbledon match. Going for his sixth successive title. Borg started slowly, as he often does.

The champion was two points away from losing the first set, but recovered and then won the tiebreaker, 7-2. He was in irresistible form from then on.

McNamara, the 26-year-old 12th seed, played well, but well was not enough on a day when the ice-cool Swede was at his brilliant best.

Serving at 4-5, 30-all, in the first set, Borg produced two service winners to save the set. McNamara, who had dropped only three points in his four previous service games, opened the tie-breaker with a double-fault and Borg went on to take the set in 43

A hard and dry No. I court produced erratic bounces in the early going, and Borg seemed the more affected. With McNamara, the defending Wimbledon doubles champion with compatriot Paul McNamee, serving well and coming in effectively, Borg looked to be in for a long, hard afternoon. LONDON - At least do no That fundamental guideline in nedicine and law comes to mind as a new order dawns in English soccer administration. For reasons of tradition, England maintains a remote influence fluence is quite disproportionate to her ability to play or organize the modern game. Not since Sir Stanley Rouse, that gentlemanly old sportmaster, was routed by Dr. Joao Havelange in the 1974 FIFA presidential elec-tion has the mother country had credible voice within the sport's ruling powers.

Since England's game and her leadership have been in lamentable decline for 15 years, one might expect the world to applaud at her mutation. Instead, just as the refined memory of Bobby Charlton overshadows the groping players of today, so the self-interested international leadership of Brazil and Italy in FIFA and UEFA yearn for the clock to go back.

Old sir Stanley is now too old. And anyway, the world is infinite-

Dunnet says he is preparing to withdraw from an undistiguished parliamentary career to concentrate on soccer. Millichip, a man of the golf course, is similarly said to be ready to sacrifice his role of chairman of West Bromwich Albion to grapple with soccer's ail-

They live on the edge of bunkrupcy, and again Millichip and Dunnett have, in their dual election, promised to wring more cash from TV, from pools, from sponsors and to try to squeeze back government entertainment tax.

Neither has yet spoken about trying to persuade players who earn four times salary of the prime minister to accept wages within the game's ability to pay.

They do, however, sound a unified voice on the question of booliganism. "I'm in favor of a more aggressive approach," says politician Dunnett. "I'm for corporal punishment," adds Millichip, who has chaired the FA displinary

Corporal punishment appears to be a refinment of Bert (The Birch) Millichip's previous exhortations that public floggings might tame the bad boys.

Going Incognito

By Russell Baker

NEW YORK — When I was a lad certain people traveled incognito. That's right: incognito. The newspapers published pictures of these people, who always wore dark sunglasses.

It sounded like a mighty glamorous way to travel. Movie stars were always traveling incognito.

Later it became clear that these travelers were simply trying to get around a bit without being drowned in deluges of publicity. They wanted pri-

Let me confess it: At that age Baker one of my dreams was to grow up and become so famous that I, too, would be able to travel incognito. But then the world changed, and everybody started wearing sunglasses, includ-ing the mug who lifted your wallet while his knife tickled your rib cage, and that ended the allure of traveling incognito, at least for me.

I go on about all this because I believe going incognito was a sound practice that ought to be re-stored to American life. There was a piece of television news film the other day to illustrate the virtue of this antique custom.

All it showed was the ubiquitous television reporter talking into her microphone while standing outside the residence of a child who had just been killed. The television reporter had arrived to ask the mother how she felt and obtain a few seconds of film showing the poor woman's grief, or rage, or breakdown.

In this case, however, the mother had resisted and refused to come out of the house or let the camera in. The television reporter dealt with this by producing another phrase dating from the age when people traveled incognito.

The mother, she reported, was "in seclusion." An excellent place, seclusion. In the age of traveling incognito, distraught next of kin commonly went into seclusion and stayed there until the newshounds found another door to bay at.

As a police reporter occasionally assigned to these ghoul's chores, I invariably felt immense relief when, having rung the doorbeil and announced myself available to observe and describe the family grief, a voice that meant business gave me just five seconds to disappear. Duty was fulfilled by reporting that the family had gone "into seclusion." Reporters with a gift for the racy phrase sometimes declared the mother "prostrate with grief," a phrase I was reluctant to use since there was a 50-50 chance that "prostrate" would appear in print as "prostate."

Unless all my local television news "teams" are deceiving me, the bereaved mother entering seclusion is a species as endan-gered as the snail darter. Night after night, the living room is visited by suffering mothers who, having ust viewed their children's lifeless bodies, try to articulate a reply to television's: "How do you feel?"

* * *

Television's eternal question, "How do you feel?" is really directed at the audience. Put to a shocked and hysterical mother, the question is idiotic. It makes sense only in the calm of the parlor where people waiting to hear the weather forecast and the call to dinner are not feeling much of anything except hunger.

These mothers are breaking the day's monotony by providing us with little spaams of — well, enter-tainment. What I feel after watching them is embarrassed. Doesn't everybody? We have been turned into voyeurs peeping into a family's most private room. It is not strange that television does this to us. The strange development is the growth of a popula-tion willing to give up its privacy in return for a few moments of ce-

One theory holds that television has become such a vital daily presence in U.S. life that we cannot be sure we exist until we have appeared on television to be certified existent by the viewing multi-

In this sort of world people en-tering "seclusion" when they might instead go on camera are deliberately rejecting a chance to exist. They have decided to travel incog-nito, but too late in the day. Nobody cares about your traveling incognito unless you have first become famous.

Amanda McKerrow Gold Medalist Ballerina, 17, Will Pursue 'Perfection'

By Kevin Klose

Washington Post Service

OSCOW + At dawn's early M light last Thursday, a media blitz burst upon Amanda McKerrow minutes after the 17year-old Rockville, Md., ballerina was told of her first-prize gold medal in the prestigious fourth Moscow International Ballet Compention,

It was just after 3 a.m. and the northern summer sky was al-ready spilling soft light on the gilded Bolshoi Theater when the call came, awakening the exhausted McKerrow in a hotel nearby.

"We've hit the jackpot - it's the gold!" shouted her mentor and coach, Mary Day, over the phone. From that mement the world changed, likely forever, for McKerrow, who says she will oursue her art "to perfection" whatever it takes.

The news from Day, founder and director of the Washington Ballet Company, immediately gan a string of calls to McKerrow from news organizations demanding to know her reaction and her plans after her tie for first place in the women's junior division. She was even asked what her foot size is.

Shared Triumph

McKerrow, the only one of 13 Americans in the competition who made it to the finals, shared the triumph with her partner, Simon Dow, who had struggled back from a career-threatening operation for a ruptured disc last year. His lifts, leaps and carries with her through three competitive rounds brought him the "best partner" award, even though he was not officially com-peting. When she called him with the news, he rushed to meet her and Day in the Rossiya Hotel. There, the trio that had started with little more than hope against powerful Soviet competition, leaped and jumped and hugged with delight.

Thrilled to Death' "I just did not expect it," said

Dow. "I was jumping up and down . . . thrilled to death. I just did not expect it." Amanda's parents, Alan and Constance McKerrow, who have shepherded their iron-willed A daughter through 10 years of training and came here in support, did not join the celebration. We just wanted them to enjoy that kind of moment together. The three of them who had worked so hard for it, they should be together," Mrs. dance."

Career vistas have widened for ballerina McKerrow.

McKerrow said.
In Washington, where the dancers returned on Saturday, friends and relatives reacted jubi lantly. "We've been getting calls for forever here, everyone wants to interview Amanda," said Cin-dy Bandle, the Washington Bai-let oublicist. Apparently, McKerrow going to have to get used to all the attention. Here is a Cinderel-la story, heightened by the fact that she comes from a company that has struggled since the 1940s, when Mary Day founded it. It still formally has no permanent home in Washington.

Olympic Resonance

In addition, McKerrow's triumph has the unmistakable resonance of the U.S. hockey team's startling upset in the 1980 Winter

And, according to Day and Mrs. McKerrow, a rise in ballet's popularity among Americans in recent years has contributed to the interest in McKerrow's accomplishment.
"I don't think even a year ago this would have happened," Mrs. McKerrow said. "If it was sports, of course, Americans would have paid attention. But now I'm surprised and pleased it could be such a big thing. I'm so grateful Amanda's coming up at this time when there is such interest in

Dow, a dark-haired, handsome Australian, said that for McKerrow "to win gold in Moscow at age 17 has unbelievable impact" on her future, likely to bring attractive offers from other compa-nics, guest-appearance requests and wide public recognition.

Stirring Torn

His own success is a stirring turn of fortune. Drawn to the Washington Ballet in 1979 because it was a small company and features the innovative cho-reography of Choo San Goh, he ruptured a lumbar disc during a performance of "The Nuteracker" near the end of a grueling holiday schedule. Recovery from an operation took months.

"It seemed unsurmountable at the time. After six months off, I was stiff and sore. I had been in training since the age of 10 and there I was in adult beginner classes and I couldn't do what they could do." But now, he is certain, the future "definitely means good things" for him at age 25 and in mid-career.

Mary Day said that "the door is wide open" for McKerrow, who began ballet lessons at the age of 6 and has been a member of the Washington Ballet for the last year. Both dancers are under contract to the company for next season, and Day said she would work with McKerrow to expand her classical repertoire. McKerrow has concentrated on the modern, for which she seems to have a flair. At the winners' performance, she and Dow danced a pas de deux to Schoenberg's 'Pelleas and Melisande' with a fluid intensity that made a "Sleeping Beauty" duct with Natalia Arkhipova, Soviet co-holder of the gold medal, seem pale and bleakly formal, for all its technical correctness.

Gold Medalist Ballerina,

McKerrow indicated she would feel her way cautiously in her new world. She lives with her parents and is intent mostly on taking a break from dancing to get a driver's license and perhaps have her wisdom teeth removed She said she is happy at the Washington Ballet. "It's home." "She is young, not really ready to leave home," Day said, "But, obviously, she won't stay with us indefinitely."

'Vicarious Enjoyment'

"Obviously it means she can write her own ticket," Alton Miller, executive director of the Washington Ballet, said in Washington Ballet, said in Washington. "To my knowledge, she's America's first gold medalist. She's won the highest award given in her category of professional ballet and she had already been asked by ABT [American Ballet Theatre] to join their company next season. That was before the gold. She declined and has signed with Washington Ballet for one more season. It's very clear that she can, and should, choose the ballet company of her choice, I would compare it to a really fine athlete being able to entertain an invitation from anywhere he damn well pleases.

"It sounds almost corny. A couple of the dancers told me there's absolutely no jealousy. partly because Amanda's so sweet. It's kind of a vicarious enjoyment they're getting. It gives the younger dancers hope . . .

"Life will go on as usual for Amanda and Simon. The three certainties for all dancers are death, taxes and daily classes."
